It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

PREFACE

In the preparation of this book the author makes no extensive claim to originality. The history and government of Iowa have been thoroughly investigated and quite thoroughly written up during the past ten years. Precision of statement and logic in arrangement, rather than the display of new material, has been the aim. The greatest problem in writing a text-book on local government is the attractive presentation of the fundamental facts without including too much that is mutable. With each session of the General Assembly there is a change in many of the small details of state government. Some of these changes, although small, are important, others have little effect and are of little value to the student of Iowa civics. It has been the author's aim to emphasize those features of local and state government which are most permanent and essential.

To the well-trained, energetic teacher no text-book is sufficient in itself. Such teacher will look about for additional material out of which to create a greater interest. Biography has not been entirely omitted in the preparation of this text, but in the estimate of the author, biography plays such an important part in the teaching of either history or government that the conscientious teacher will insist upon much outside work in that line from the student. Government is decidedly a study of men in action. Therefore the teacher of government realizes the value of the study of biography as a means of enriching the subject and of creating a lively interest in class work.

Too much emphasis can scarcely be laid upon the use of material illustrations. Local officers of the town and township ought to be pointed out. The official work each has to do ought to be mentioned. The police force, the fire department, the mail carrier, the truant officer, are all acquaintances of the children in school. Their part in the government of the state and nation may be made topics of great interest. The county court house, containing the county offices, is not far away; primary elections and local conventions are held in every precinct; district court is held at the county seat; a state institution may be near enough for the teacher and the class to visit; or they may visit the state capitol at Des Moines. These outside matters, so difficult to include in a text, may be so correlated with the daily class exercises as to result in great benefit to the student.

HISTORY AND GOVERNMENT OF IOWA

CHAPTER I.

ORIGIN AND OWNERSHIP OF IOWA *

The Mound Builders were the earliest inhabitants of Iowa of whom we have historical evidence. Crude implements, human skulls and other human remains give evidence of a people who inhabited this section of the great Mississippi Valley even before the Mound Builders came. We know nothing of importance concerning these earlier peoples, but believe they were much lower in civilization than the Mound Builders and perhaps were savages. The Mound Builders left material remains from which we have learned much concerning their civilization and mode of living. They are called Mound Builders because in many parts of the Mississippi and Ohio Valleys they erected great mounds of earth to mark the burial places of their dead. These mounds, many of which are located on the bluffs along the Mississippi

*The meaning of the word "Iowa" is disputed by different authorities. It is an Indian word and is spelled differently in the language of the early Indians who first used it. Some think it means "The Beautiful Land," others say it means "This is the Place." Two other explanations are not so satisfactory — "Across the River," and "The Drowsy Ones." The latter is doubtless not pleasing to the present inhabitants.

River, are found to contain human skeletons, axes and other implements made of stone, copper vessels, stone knives and often stone carvings representing birds and animals. The greatest number of these mounds in Iowa are found along the Mississippi River from Dubuque south as far as Des Moines County, but similar mounds of earth are found in the Des Moines Valley and as far west as the Little Sioux River. A short distance north of Des Moines, on a high bluff, are many acres covered with such mounds. All these remains prove the Mound Builders to have been a people much superior in civilization and life to the Indians who seem to have come later. It is not known how long these early people were able to resist the invaders who drove them out. The people who were the ancestors of the Indians doubtless were their successors.

The American Indians were the next inhabitants of Iowa if the evidence we now have is correct. The Indians who formerly occupied the soil of Iowa were not so savage and warlike as many tribes found in other parts of the United States. If they were cruel and treacherous as enemies they were also brave warriors and loyal friends to many white people with whom they soon began to trade. The Indians claimed the soil by right of conquest and occupation and next to the Mound Builders are recognized as the second owners of the soil of Iowa. The countries of Europe held the theory that lands discovered or found in the possession of uncivilized peoples were subject to seizure and settlement by any Christian nation. These European nations recognized the rights of the Indians as occupants of the soil, but asserted that discovery and settlement by Christian nations gave the right to extinguish the Indian title of occupancy.

Claimed by Spain. On the morning of October 12, 1492, Christopher Columbus, an Italian from the city of Genoa, in the employ of the King and Queen of Spain, first saw the land of the western continent. He made discoveries among the islands of the West Indies and claimed the country for the Government of Spain. Columbus made three other voyages to America and discovered the coasts of Central and South America. A little later other Spanish explorers visited the coast of Florida and the Gulf region. During the Mediæval period the authority of the Church was held superior to that of the State and the Pope at Rome claimed to be in the exercise of that authority. On the fourth of May, 1493, Pope Alexander VI. issued a bull, or proclamation, dividing the unchristian world into two parts, giving the western part to Spain and the eastern part to Portugal. As a division line he chose the meridian one hundred leagues west of the Azores. Later (1494) the line was fixed at three hundred and seventy-five leagues west of the Cape Verd Islands. At that time Spain and Portugal were the leading nations of the world in making discoveries and explorations. Spain's claim to America made by Columbus was strengthened by this act of the Church asserting its authority. Thus Spain was the first among Christian nations to claim the soil of Iowa.

Claimed by England. In the year 1497, John Cabot sailed from Bristol, England, and in the names of the King and Queen discovered and explored the coast of North America from Labrador towards the south. Later his son Sebastian made another expedition to our eastern shores. On these discoveries and explorations England based a claim to the American continent south of the St. Lawrence River and north of the Spanish claims, and extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific Oceans. From this time England also claimed the soil of Iowa.

Claimed by France. In the early years of the sixteenth century, France made extensive settlements in the St. Lawrence Valley and later pushed farther west and established trading posts along the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers. In the spring of 1673, James Marquette, a French Jesuit missionary, and Louis Joliet, a French-Canadian fur trader, crossed the lakes and followed the Wisconsin River down to the Mississippi. They then floated down the Mississippi in boats and were probably the first white men to see Iowa. They made a landing on Iowa soil, on June 25, 1673, at the mouth of the Des Moines River. In 1682, La Salle descended the Illinois River, then passed down the Mississippi to the Gulf. On the basis of these two expeditions, France claimed the territory drained by the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers and called it Louisiana after King Louis XIV. Now France became another claimant to the soil of Iowa.

France Cedes Claim. A dispute soon arose between England and France over the ownership of the territory in the valleys of the St. Lawrence and Ohio Rivers. The trouble increased when the English and the French inhabitants began to make settlements in the Ohio Valley. War broke out in 1755, and by the treaty of Paris, which closed the conflict in 1763, France ceded to England Canada, except three small islands near Newfoundland, and her possessions east of the Mississippi River, except New Orleans. France then ceded her possessions west of the Mississippi and New Orleans to Spain. This gave Spain undisputed ownership of the soil of Iowa.

Purchased by the United States. With the close of the French Revolution, about 1799, Napoleon Bonaparte became the leading ruler in Europe. He rapidly made new treaties of alliance with the leading nations on the continent. By the secret treaty of San il de Fonso, of October 1, 1800, Spain ceded the territory west of the river to France. So we find France again the owner of the territory a part of which later became Iowa. But France found a great rival in England and was anxious to destroy its power and reduce its territory. Napoleon feared England would seize Louisiana and annex it to the territory she already owned. About the same time the United States had great difficulty over the navigation of the lower Mississippi. While Spain yet owned the Louisiana Territory and the land on both sides of the mouth of the Mississippi the Spanish authorities often charged exorbitant duties on goods shipped up the river destined for towns in the United States. These troubles continued after France received the territory from Spain in 1800. Congress decided to make a new treaty with France and if possible to purchase the territory on either side of the mouth of the river. President Jefferson instructed Robert Livingston, who was then minister to France, to make a treaty, and later sent James Monroe to assist in the negotiations. A treaty was negotiated and signed on April 30, 1803, by which France sold the Louisiana Territory to the United States. By this treaty of purchase the soil of Iowa for the first time came into the possession of the United States.

Territorial Organization. On October 31, 1803, Congress passed an act placing the Louisiana Territory under the direct control of the President, who was to exercise all military, civil and judicial power through such officers as he would appoint. On March 26, 1804, Congress passed an act dividing the Louisiana Territory on the thirty-third parallel and called the south part the Territory of Orleans and the north part the District of Louisiana. To the Territory of Orleans Congress gave an organized government, consisting of governor, secretary, legislature and judiciary, all of whom were to be appointed by the President. The north part, called the District of Louisiana, was placed under the control of the governor and judges of the Territory of Indiana, who were to establish courts in the district and prescribe their jurisdiction. Iowa was then a part of this District of Louisiana. On March 3, 1805, Congress changed the name, District of Louisiana, to Territory of Louisiana and gave it a territorial government of its own to be administered by a governor, secretary and judges. Iowa was thus a part of the Territory of Louisiana.

Part of Missouri. On June 4, 1812, Congress passed an act changing the name of the Territory of Louisiana to the Territory of Missouri and gave it an organized form of government. Iowa existed as a part of the Territory of Missouri until that territory was admitted into the Union as a State on August 10, 1821. From 1821, Congress seemed to have forgotten about the territory to the north of Missouri and it remained without a government and the protection of law until a crime was committed in 1834, when the attention of Congress was called to its condition and all this territory was included within the Territory of Michigan.

With Michigan and Wisconsin. Iowa existed as a part of the Territory of Michigan from June 28, 1834, until April 20, 1836, when Michigan was reduced to its present size and the remainder of that territory was organized under the name of Wisconsin. From 1836 until June 12, 1838, Iowa was a part of Wisconsin Territory, but was on that date separated from Wisconsin, and all that part of Wisconsin Territory lying west of the Mississippi was organized under the Territory of Iowa.

Iowa Territory. Iowa Territory was bounded on the south by the State of Missouri, on the west by the Missouri and White-earth Rivers, on the north by Canada, and on the east by the Mississippi River and a line due north from the head waters of that river to the Canadian line. Thus Iowa Territory included the present State and parts of Minnesota and of North and of South Dakota. Iowa remained a territory until December 28, 1846, when it was admitted into the Union as a State.

CHAPTER II.

EARLY SETTLEMENTS IN IOWA

Indians in Iowa. When the first white men of Europe explored the lands west of the Mississippi River they found the American Indians living in wigwams clustered in villages along the hillsides and streams. They made their living by hunting and fishing and by a crude form of agriculture by which they stirred the soil with sharp sticks and raised maize and other grains. Iowa was an ideal land for the Indian. On the hills and in the valleys were deer, and on the prairies were found the buffalo. Wild turkeys, prairie chickens, grouse and other wild game were to be found on the meadows and in the thickets. Plums, grapes, and other wild fruits were in abundance.

The Indians found predecessors in the Mound Builders, a race of people who differed in stature and in mode of living from themselves. The numerous great mounds of earth found on the high bluffs along the Mississippi River tell a long story of the life and habits of these interesting people. Their departure was doubtless hastened by the bands of savage Indians who came into the Mississippi Valley from both the east and the west. Some of the most noted tribes of Iowa Indians were the Sioux, who held the regions in the north of Iowa and Minnesota and penetrated into Dakota. The Sacs and Foxes, who roamed over the plains of Iowa, Illinois and Wisconsin, were members of the Algonquin tribe from the eastern Middle States. The Iowas were in the southern part of the State and the Dakotas came from the northwest. There were many other tribes among whom were the Winnebagoes, Pottawattamies, Chippewas, Ottawas, and the Illini. Many of the counties, cities and towns derived their names from Indian tribes and from the Indian chiefs.

The Indians Lost Iowa. The transfers of lands from the Indians to the whites were made through treaties. Delegates representing the United States and delegates representing the Indians met and agreed on terms. The Government paid for the territory and the amount and other details were put into writing and the chiefs made their marks as signatures. The Indians were often unable to cope with the white man's shrewdness and generally were badly cheated. Bright colored blankets, fire-arms and whiskey often purchased more than their value in lands. The most noted treaty by which Iowa lands were secured from the Indians was in 1830, when the United States bought from the Sacs and Foxes, Sioux, Omahas, Otoes and Missouris, a large portion of the western part of the State, by paying a small sum to each of the tribes. Another large area was secured by the Black Hawk Purchase in 1833, and in 1836 the four hundred square miles reserved for the Sacs and Foxes, and comprising Louisa County, was secured by the whites.

First White Settlers. It was more than a hundred years after Marquette and Joliet first landed on Iowa soil before the first white settlers came to establish homes on the west side of the Mississippi. The first white man to settle in Iowa and to earn a living from the products of its soil was Julien Dubuque, a Frenchman, who came to what is now the city of Dubuque, in 1788. He learned from the Indians what rich deposits of lead were found on the banks of the river and he obtained from the Indians the sole right to work the lead mines. He took ten French-Canadians with him and by a treaty signed with the Foxes on September 22, 1788, at Prairie du Chien, he acquired the desired lands and immediately began operations. Dubuque built a log house, planted corn and other grains, and soon made his men comfortable in the little village. In March, 1810, Dubuque died and was buried on the bluffs near by the village. A wooden cross above the grave contained the inscription, "Julien Dubuque, Miner of the mines of Spain."

In 1795, or seven years after the first settlement made in Iowa, another Frenchman, whose name was Basil Gaillard, sometimes referred to as Giard, settled a little farther north along the river on the present site of McGregor in Clayton County. He is reported as having known Dubuque, and the two men sometimes traded together. Several years later, after the death of Gaillard, his heirs sold the immense tract of land for the small sum of three hundred dollars.

A third settler on Iowa soil was Louis Honori, who settled near Montrose in Lea County. He obtained a title to his lands from the Lieutenant-Governor of Louisiana Territory in 1799. In 1839, the United States issued a title to some of this land and it is said to be the earliest title to any soil in Iowa. A little later came Dr. Muir, a Scotch surgeon in the army, who was at first stationed in a frontier fort in Illinois and who later built a house on the present site of the city of Keokuk. Another early settler was Antoine LeClaire, who was among the first to settle at Davenport. A little later came Colonel George Davenport, a trader and army contractor, who settled in Davenport about 1820. It was after him that the city of Davenport took its name.

Two expeditions sent out for the purpose of exploration deserve mention in connection with the early history of Iowa. The first was the Lewis and Clark Expedition, sent out by President Jefferson, and starting from St. Louis in 1804. The second was that under Lieutenant Zebulon Montgomery Pike, sent out by the army, also starting from St. Louis, but a year later. Pike was to explore the Mississippi River to its source, and to select suitable places for the erection of forts to secure the newly purchased territory. Lewis and Clark were instructed to follow up the Missouri to its source, and if possible to explore the country over to the Pacific Coast. They, like Pike, were instructed to meet the Indians and explain their mission and to cultivate their friendship by giving them presents. They held a council at a point along the great bluffs on the Missouri about opposite from the present site of Council Bluffs. Other places were visited by the same expedition; among them was Sioux City, during the month of August, 1805.

Other settlements were later made within the interior of the state along the Des Moines, Iowa and Cedar Rivers. Many of these earliest settlements were made by fur trading companies, among which were the American, the Green Bay, and the stations controlled by the Chouteaus of St. Louis. Pierre Chouteau, Sr., established a trading post where the city of Ottumwa now stands. In 1838, the agency for the Sac and Fox Indians was located where Agency City now stands, and General Joseph M. Street was placed in charge. Settlements gradually spread to the north, and in 1843 a fort was built on the spot where Des Moines now stands. The fort was at first called Fort Raccoon and was under the command of Captain James Allen; later the name was changed to Des Moines. Fort Clark was another early settlement, made in 1850, and later became Fort Dodge at the suggestion of General Winfield Scott. Such forts were established all over the central and western part of the territory to give protection to the pioneer settlers as they gradually claimed the soil from the Indians. Most of them continued as forts only long enough to assure a peaceful settlement by the whites.

CHAPTER III.

TERRITORIAL GOVERNMENT

Origin of Territorial Lands. When the colonies won their independence from England with the close of the Revolutionary War, they also won the title to the country lying between their western boundaries and the Mississippi River. Seven states — Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia — claimed these western lands as parts of their colonial areas. Six of the states had no western lands and they declared these lands lying to the west ought to be ceded to the Federal Government, and owned by the states in common, as they had all fought for a common cause during the war and all ought to share equally in the lands taken from England. The states without lands won their demands by refusing to adopt the Articles of Confederation until the other states consented to give up their western land claims.

Origin of Territorial Government. As early as 1780, it was evident the Federal Government would eventually become the owner of this great area commonly known as the Northwest. Three years later, Congress began to consider plans of government for the people who were rapidly settling this region. On April 23, 1784, an Ordinance was passed by Congress providing for a temporary government, but the provisions of that first Ordinance were not satisfactory to many people and no settlements were made under it. The subject was debated in Congress for four years longer before any definite action was taken. Finally, on July 13, 1787, another Act, known as the Northwest Ordinance, was passed by the Congress of the Confederation and provided a territorial government for the territory northwest of the Ohio River.

The Northwest Ordinance. The Organic Act of July 13, 1787, for the government of the Northwest Territory, is a state paper second in importance only to the Constitution of the United States. The Ordinance embraced three distinct purposes. First, it granted to the inhabitants of the territory those fundamental political and personal rights which are deemed to lie at the basis of the American system of government. They include the recognition of the equality of inheritance; the absolute freedom in belief and worship; the prohibition of legislation violating the obligation of contract; the necessity for ample provision for education; the fair treatment of the Indians; and the prohibition of slavery in the territory. Second, it was a constitution or fundamental law for the immediate government of the territory. To this end it superseded the Ordinance of April 23, 1784. Third, it declared the general attitude of the Federal Government in what it deemed should be the ultimate status of such territory. It specifically stated that this territory was to be perpetually a part of the Union and when it reached a sufficient stage of development was to be admitted into the Union in not less than three or more than five states. In this Act, which formed the basis for all future acts for the government of territories, Congress definitely asserted its absolute supremacy over unorganized territory, and the limitations it proposed to place over such territory as it organized.

Relation to Federal Government. An organized territory remains under the absolute control of Congress, and may at any time suffer its Organic Law repealed or its area divided and another territory created. The territory differs then from a state in that the territory is subject directly to the laws of Congress, while the state is subject to the Constitution of the United States and may exercise all powers not prohibited to it by the Constitution. Because of this difference the states have privileges not enjoyed by the territories. The people of a territory have no voice in the election of President, and they have no senators or representatives in Congress. Each territory does have a delegate in the national House of Representatives. He is elected by the people of the territory and has the right to take part in debate, but not to vote.

Organic Act of Iowa. The Organic Act making Iowa a separate territory was passed by Congress on June 12, 1838. It was a written constitution according to which the territory was to be governed. It differed from the present State Constitution in that it was made by Congress and not by the people of the territory. It was similar in many ways to the State Constitution and divided the government into executive, legislative and judicial departments, provided officers for each, and defined their duties. The Act begins by defining the boundaries of the territory. It was to include the part of Wisconsin Territory not included within that state. Iowa Territory was bounded on the south by the northern boundary of the State of Missouri, on the west by the Missouri and White-earth Rivers, on the north by Canada and on the east by the Mississippi River and by a line due north from the source of the Mississippi to Canada. It therefore included the present State of Iowa and parts of Minnesota, North Dakota and South Dakota. Congress reserved the right of dividing the territory into two or more territories at its own discretion.

The Executive Authority. The Organic Act vested the executive power and authority in a governor, who was to be appointed by the President of the United States with the consent of the Senate, and was to hold office for a period of three years unless sooner removed by the President. The duties of the governor were carefully enumerated. He was to be, above all, a general executive officer and administrator of the affairs of the territory. He was commander-in-chief of the militia, superintendent of Indian affairs, and was required to approve all laws of the territorial legislature, which gave him the absolute veto power. The veto power was modified by Congress in 1839, so as to allow the legislature to pass an act over the governor's veto by a two-thirds vote of both houses. The governor could pardon all offenses against the laws of the territory and could grant reprieves for offenses committed against the laws of the United States, until the decision of the President could be made known. The act further provided that with the advice and consent of the legislative council the governor was to appoint all judicial officers, except those of the staff, and all civil officers not therein provided. He also could appoint to office in case of vacancy occurring during recess of the council. The governor was also given authority to initiate the new government, to call the first elections and to determine the place of meeting of the first legislature. In fact, the authority of the governor under the territory was in many respects greater than that of state governor of later date.

Other Officers. The Organic Act further provided for a secretary, a marshal, an attorney, a chief justice and two associate justices. All these were to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. The governor and other six officers constituted the chief officials of the territory. All but the governor were appointed to serve for four years or until removed by the President. These officials were generally chosen from outside the territory, and it was not until recent times that territorial governors, secretaries and judges have been frequently chosen from among the people they are to serve. It was the duty of the secretary to keep a record of all acts and proceedings of the governor in his executive department, and to record and preserve copies of all laws enacted by the legislature. On or before the first Monday in December each year it was his duty to forward one copy of each to the President of the United States and to send two copies of each to the Speaker of the House of Representatives for the use of Congress. In case of death, removal, resignation, or necessary absence of the governor, the secretary of the territory was to fill the office until the President made another appointment. The power of the President to appoint and remove territorial officials, and the power of Congress to accept or reject any legislation that the territory enacted, formed a close connecting link between the territorial and Federal Governments.

The Legislative Authority. The legislative authority was vested in a governor and a legislative assembly. The legislative assembly consisted of two houses, an upper house, called the Council, and a lower house, called the House of Representatives. The Council consisted of thirteen members chosen by the qualified electors of the territory to serve for a period of two years. The House of Representatives consisted of twenty-six members elected by the qualified electors for a period of one year. The powers of the legislature were great and in some respects comprehended a broader sphere of activity than is now possessed by the state legislature. The legislative power was to extend to all rightful subjects of legislation. There were, however, certain limitations upon the powers of the legislature. No law could be passed interfering with the primary disposal of the soil; no tax could be imposed upon property of the United States; the lands and other property of non-residents could not be taxed higher than those of residents, and all laws of the territory had to be submitted to Congress, and if disapproved by that body, were to be void. The first legislature passed acts providing for the location of the territorial capital at Iowa City; for the establishment of a code of criminal procedure; for the chartering of corporations for business purposes; for the further organization of counties which had been begun under Michigan and Wisconsin Territories, and for the protection of personal property and the securing of personal rights.

The Judicial Authority. The judicial authority was vested in a Supreme Court, District Courts, Probate Courts, and in justices of the peace. The Supreme Court consisted of a chief justice and two associate justices, any two of whom were to constitute a quorum, and who were to hold a term of court at the seat of government annually, and were to serve for a term of four years. The territory was divided into three judicial districts and one judge was to preside over each district and to take up his residence in the district over which he presided. As judges of the Supreme Court they met once a year at the seat of government, and as District judges they held court in the counties, each in his own district. The jurisdiction of the courts and of the justices of the peace was left by the Organic Act to be provided for by the legislature, except that the justices of the peace were denied jurisdiction in cases when the titles or boundaries of lands were in dispute or when the sum in controversy exceeded fifty dollars. The justices' courts were the lowest courts of the territory and their jurisdiction was co-extensive with the county. These justices were at first appointed by the governor, but later, by an amendment to the Organic Act, they were elected by the people.

Cases could be appealed from the justices' court to the district courts and from there to the Supreme Court of the territory, which was final for all cases in which the sum in controversy did not exceed one thousand dollars. Cases involving larger amounts could be appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States. Indictments for offenses against the laws of the territory were brought by grand juries and the cases were tried in the courts by petit juries in the same manner as they are to-day under the laws of the state. An attorney and a marshal were also appointed by the President to assist the courts in the prosecution of cases arising. District attorneys were appointed by the governor and were to prosecute all cases against the territory arising within their respective districts.

Local Institutions. Counties were already surveyed and established in Iowa, while the territory was yet under the jurisdiction of Wisconsin. Twenty-two counties had been organized and officers elected to carry out the local government. The power to establish counties in the territory of Iowa was given to the legislature. Each county was under a Board of three commissioners, whose duties and powers corresponded to those of our present Boards of county supervisors. The commissioners appointed their own clerk who performed such duties as are now performed by the county auditor. Other officers of a county were a sheriff, a recorder, a surveyor, an assessor, constables and justices of the peace. The commissioners held office for three years, the sheriff, recorder, surveyor, constables and justices of the peace held office for two years, and an assessor was appointed annually for each county.

Education. The Organic Act had but little to say concerning education, but Robert Lucas, the first terri-territorial governor, was a public-spirited man and was enthusiastic for education and the moral development of the people. His first message to the territorial legislature contained a recommendation for a public school system. He said, "There is no subject to which I wish to call your attention more emphatically than the subject of establishing at the beginning of our political existence, a well-digested system of common schools." The legislature acted upon his advice and provided that the county commissioners should divide their respective counties into school districts whenever a petition signed by a majority of the voters within such districts should be presented to them. The people did not consider education of so great value in those early days and it seems that no districts were actually organized under that law.

Suffrage. The right of suffrage was granted to the people of the territory by the Organic Act and was further declared by an act of the territorial legislature in the following terms: "No person shall be entitled to vote at any election in this territory who has not attained the age of twenty-one years, who is not a free white male citizen, and who has not resided in this territory at least six months immediately previous to his application to vote.

The Boundary Question. The boundary line between the Territory of Iowa and the State of Missouri soon became a matter of dispute and Congress was called upon to settle the question. On June 18, 1838, Congress passed an act providing for a commission to ascertain the proper division line and to mark it. The act provided for three commissioners, one from Missouri, one from Iowa, and one to be chosen by Congress. Missouri refused to be represented upon the commission and continued to claim lands in Iowa Territory, and to collect taxes from them.

Iowa authorities offered to refer the entire matter to Congress, but Missouri refused and threatened to invade Iowa with an armed force. Robert Lucas, then governor of Iowa Territory, claimed the dispute was not one between Missouri and Iowa, but between Missouri and Congress, and as the representative of the rights of Congress over the territory, he would hold the disputed lands at all hazards and do so by armed forces. The Missouri authorities then consented to refer the entire question to the United States Supreme Court, by whose decision, in 1848, all the land claimed by Iowa was awarded to the territory.

CHAPTER IV.

EARLY STATE GOVERNMENT

Rights of the People. The political and personal rights of the people of Iowa, both as a territory and as a state, had their origin in the rights first guaranteed by Congress to the people of the Northwest Territory. In the previous chapter we learned these rights embraced the right of equality of inheritance; freedom of worship; the right and necessity of establishing public schools; the prohibition of slavery within the territory; the maintenance of recognized legal rights at common law, such as trial by jury, the writ of habeas corpus, the holding of private property, moderate fines and no cruel or unlawful punishment; and that all persons shall be bailable unless held for capital offenses. These fundamental rights were retained in each of the territorial governments of the subdivisions of the Northwest Territory, and we find them restated in the territorial governments of Michigan, Wisconsin and of Iowa, in the following language: "The inhabitants of the said territory shall be entitled to and enjoy all the rights, privileges and advantages granted and secured to the people of the United States northwest of the river Ohio."

The Origin of Institutions. Almost all institutions found in the state at a later date had their origin in the territory. The calling of elections, the taking of the census, the enumeration of officers and many other functions and duties were provided for by the provisions of the Organic Act. The Organic Act also made provision for the purchase of a library to be kept at the seat of government. The first territorial legislature granted charters of incorporation to the cities of Davenport and Muscatine, and gave away many exclusive privileges to individual citizens, such as charters for the operation of ferry-boats across rivers and the running of stage-coaches. The first legislature also provided for the erection of a penitentiary at Fort Madison and voted to build a capital building on a site to be selected in Johnson County. In 1838, agricultural societies were formed for the stimulus of better farming. Later these early agricultural meetings were incorporated under the laws of the territory, and later still developed into county fairs. The territorial legislature made provision for the education at the public expense of all white children of the territory and encouraged the founding of academies and seminaries. On December 29, 1838, the legislature passed an act incorporating The Wapello Seminary in Louisa County. Fort Madison, Burlington, Dubuque, Davenport, Keosauka and Mount Pleasant were among other early towns having these schools. Banks were also chartered at an early date. The second general assembly of the state established a state university at Iowa City and provided that it have two branches, one at Dubuque and the other at Fairfield. These branches were never erected and soon that part of the act was repealed. An act was also passed providing for Normal Schools at Andrew, Oskaloosa and Mount Pleasant. This act was also repealed and a normal department was attached to the University until 1876, when the legislature authorized the organization of such school at Cedar Falls.

Territorial and State Capitals. Iowa, as both territory and state, has had three capital cities. When Wisconsin was first organized as a separate territory in 1836, there was a rivalry between the Mississippi River towns for the seat of government. A vote of the people finally decided the matter in favor of Madison, now the state capital of Wisconsin. The provisional law accepting the choice of the people was so drawn up as to provide a temporary capital at Burlington until a suitable building could be provided at Madison. The capital was to remain at Burlington until March 4, 1839, unless the buildings were completed earlier than that date. The first building used as a capitol in Burlington was erected by a wealthy man of the territory, named Smith, but this building was destroyed by fire in the fall of 1837, and during the next session of the legislature the two Houses met in separate buildings. The Council met in the upper room of a store building and the House of Representatives met in a frame building not far away. When Iowa was organized as a separate territory, with a government of its own, in 1838, the Organic Act provided that the legislature should hold its first session at such time and place in the territory as the governor should appoint and direct. The act also provided that the governor and legislature should as soon as possible locate and establish a seat of government for the territory. Robert Lucas, the first governor, decided to continue Burlington as the capital city of the territory of Iowa and called the first territorial assembly together there in November, 1838. The first session was held in Zion Church. This old building was built of brick and was used as a court-house and general public building, besides housing the first territorial legislature.

The first territorial legislature decided to locate the permanent capital farther west and provided for a commission to select a site. The commission finally decided on a site on the banks of the Iowa River in Johnson County, now occupied by Iowa City. On April 30, 1841, Robert Lucas, as governor, issued a proclamation changing the capital from Burlington to Iowa City, where it remained throughout the territorial period. The capital remained at Iowa City after Iowa became a state, but as settlements extended westward the feeling grew that the capital ought to be located nearer the center of the state. Des Moines was at that time the only town in the central portion of the state of any considerable size and it was selected to be the permanent capital. In November, 1857, the capital was removed to Des Moines and the records, furniture and equipments of the offices of state were drawn across the country on bob-sleds and placed in the new building in that city. "The capitol building was in the midst of heavy woods, with squirrels, quail and grouse abundant. Along Four Mile Creek, to the east, were wild turkeys, and an occasional elk and deer. There were no sidewalks near the capitol. Hazel brush was dense. Not far off was a pond containing muskrats. The only bridge across the river was a pontoon structure. The East Side, the side on which the capitol then, as well as to-day, was located, had about thirty houses. Muddy lowlands stretched between the capitol and the river."* The temporary capitol building at Des Moines was a three story structure and resembled a modern school building rather than a state capitol. The present beautiful capitol was begun in 1873, and finished twelve years later at a cost of more than three million dollars. The Iowans are proud of their capitol, asserting that during the entire period of its erection not a single action expired that was not honest and worthy of being approved by the people, and the entire cost was much less than is often expended upon similar public buildings.†

Making of the Constitution. As early as the fall of 1839, Governor Lucas recommended that the legislative assembly memorialize Congress for permission to form a Constitution. No definite result came from this recommendation. In 1840, the question of calling a constitutional convention was submitted to a vote of the people. It was defeated by a large majority. The same question was again submitted to the people in 1842, and was again defeated by a decisive vote. The opponents of state organization continued to express fear lest the change from territory to state would greatly increase the burden of taxation. They also claimed a state government could not increase their advantages beyond what the territory already gave except in the matter of representation in Congress and that would not recompense for the added burdens of taxation. The Whigs, who were then rapidly gaining strength under their Whig governor, claimed the Democrats only urged statehood for the purpose of providing places for Democratic office-seekers. In December, 1843, Governor Chambers sent a recommendation to the legislature urging that the question of forming a Constitution and applying for admission into the Union be again submitted to the people. By this time the population of the territory numbered over seventy thousand people and the governor felt sure Congress would admit the territory to statehood if the people would only vote in favor of becoming a state. Two years of growth and reflection had brought about a change in sentiment. The people had evidently become convinced that statehood had advantages over territorial government and the legislature voted to submit the question to the people once more. The vote was taken in the township elections in April, 1844, and this time the people voted in favor of framing a Constitution and applying for admission into the Union as a state. Delegates were elected and a convention was held at Iowa City, October 7, 1844, at which time a Constitution and boundary lines were agreed upon for the new state. These lines included a large part of the present state of Minnesota, but excluded a tract embracing all the present counties of Lyon, Osceola, and Sioux, and parts of Dickinson, O'Brien, Plymouth and Woodbury. The proposed Constitution, with outlined territory for the proposed state, was submitted to Congress for approval, but that body saw fit to change the proposed boundary lines, and when it was submitted to the people at an election in April, 1845, it was defeated. Then the question of adopting the Constitution, as it was framed by the convention, was voted on and it too was defeated. It was not until May 4, 1846, that another constitutional convention convened at Iowa City and this time succeeded in framing such Constitution and defining such boundaries as would meet the approval of both the people of the state and of Congress. The boundaries described in the Constitution were identical with those of the state at the present time and the provisions of the Constitution were such as were in harmony with a statehood bill then pending in Congress. This Constitution was adopted by the people at an election held August 3, 1846, the vote being 9492 for and 9036 against the Constitution. Congress ratified the action of the people and Iowa was admitted into the Union as the twenty-ninth state on December 28, 1846. The question of amending or revising the Constitution was agitated in 1854, and the fifth general assembly passed an act approved January 24, 1855, providing an election to be held in August, 1856, at which was submitted the question of revision and amendment. The proposition carried and at a special election held the following November, delegates were chosen to meet at Iowa City in January, 1857. The present Constitution of the State of Iowa was framed in this convention, and was adopted by the people at an election held August 3, 1857. The governor issued a proclamation proclaiming it to be in effect September 3, 1857.

The First Election. The people of Iowa felt sure Congress would admit the territory into the Union and immediately after the ratification of the Constitution at a popular election, began preparations for carrying on state government. Governor James Clark issued a proclamation calling an election for October 26, 1846, for the purpose of choosing state officers and members of the general assembly. The first election was important because the controversies over statehood had unsettled political parties and because each political faction thought it ought to exert as large influence as possible over early state institutions. The first general assembly would also have the privilege of choosing the first United States Senators and of selecting three supreme court judges, for under the first Constitution of the state these judges were chosen by the legislature instead of by popular vote, as at present. The Democrats carried the election and the governor and other state officers were chosen from that party. In the election of members to the general assembly the Democrats were not so successful. When the legislature met it was found the Whigs had nearly as many members as did the Democrats, and together with a few other members, who were not directly identified with either of the two great parties, they caused a political deadlock in the first legislature and it failed to elect United States Senators or supreme court judges. After the adjournment of the legislature the governor appointed judges for the supreme court, who at once took up the duties of their offices. But the United States Senators were not so chosen and the state was not represented in the United States Senate during the first two years of statehood.

Revision of the Constitution. The Constitution of 1846 was not considered satisfactory at the time of its adoption, but the people were anxious to be admitted into the Union and voted for the Constitution as the shortest road to admission. In fact, the newspapers of the state declared certain articles of the Constitution must be changed even before Congress had fully admitted the territory into the Union. An attempt was made to amend the Constitution in the first session of the legislature, but it came to nothing. The amending or revising of the Constitution was made the political issue in the campaign of 1848. This agitation continued until the election of Stephen Hempstead as governor. He was thoroughly opposed to changing the Constitution and during the next four years, from 1850 to 1854, little progress was made in that direction. In some respects the first state Constitution had great defects and it soon became evident the people would demand certain changes be made. The ninth article of the Constitution denied the legislature the power of creating corporations by special laws. It practically denied the people the right of banking privileges, and what was worse, it caused Iowa to be flooded with depreciated paper currency from other states. In 1855, the general assembly passed an act providing for the amendment of the Constitution. It provided that the question should be voted on by the people at the general election of 1856. The proposition carried before the election and in November thirty-six delegates were elected to a convention to revise or amend the Constitution. The result was a thorough revision and the principal changes were as follows: The legislature was given power to make laws relating to corporations; it could pass general laws for banking under certain restrictions; it could establish a state bank with branches, but such bank must be founded on an actual specie basis; it increased the limit of the state indebtedness from $100,000 to $250,000; it provided that the question of calling a new convention should be submitted to the people every ten years; it changed the period of taking the census from every two to every ten years; it provided that the state should protect the permanent school fund by being responsible for the losses and making them part of the funded debt; it provided for a Board of education to have control of educational interests, but this clause was soon changed; it changed the term of governor from four years to two years; it provided for a lieutenant-governor and for an attorney-general; it provided for the election of the supreme court judges by the people at the general election instead of by the legislature; it located the permanent seat of government of the state at Des Moines and the State University at Iowa City.

CHAPTER V.

GOVERNORS OF IOWA

The government and institutions of a state are modified to a large extent by the lives and character of its party leaders. In this respect Iowa has been fortunate. Both as a territory and as a state the governors have been, in many instances, men of both state and national reputation. In many cases the men who have filled the office of governor in the State of Iowa have been the recognized leaders of their parties at the time of their election. Under the territorial government the governor was appointed by the President and confirmed by the United States Senate, while under the government of the state, he has been chosen by popular vote. With the revision of the Constitution in 1857, the term of governor was changed from four to two years.

Robert Lucas, first Governor of Iowa Territory, was born at Shepherdstown, Virginia, April 1, 1781. At the time of his appointment as Governor of Iowa, he was fifty-seven years old. He was tall and slender and is said to have resembled Andrew Jackson. His father was an officer in the Revolutionary War and Robert early became a soldier and attained to the rank of captain, and later to that of colonel, while serving in the War of 1812. He was county surveyor, justice of the peace, and for nineteen years a member of the Ohio Legislature, during which time he served as Chairman of both Houses. He was elected Governor of Ohio in 1832 and was re-elected in 1834. He was Chairman of the National Democratic Convention in 1832. As a young man, Lucas acquired a good education under the direction of a private tutor, he had long experience in the army and in public life, and was a man of temperate habits, high ideals and ambitious to serve the people well. In 1838, President Van Buren appointed him to serve as the first Governor of the Territory of Iowa. He served as Governor from 1838 to 1841, after which he continued an active interest in the affairs of the territory and state by attending conventions and leading in political discussions.

Governor Lucas came to Iowa at a time when the new territory needed a strong and statesman-like leader to set the new government into operation. He dealt with the Missouri boundary dispute in a firm and judicious manner. He believed in religion and was enthusiastic in support of education and did much for the betterment of the common schools of the territory. He was strongly opposed to gambling and intemperance and was a leader in the temperance movement in Iowa. In 1844, and again in 1846, Lucas was a delegate in the conventions for the framing of State Constitutions. He died in Iowa City, February 7, 1853, at the age of seventy-two.

John Chambers, the second Governor of Iowa Territory, was born in New Jersey in 1780. He was admitted to the bar in 1800 and was elected to the Kentucky Legislature in 1812. In 1828, he served in the lower House of Congress. When William Henry Harrison, the first Whig President, was inaugurated, he appointed John Chambers to be Governor of Iowa Territory and gave him a commission to enter upon the duties of that office on March 25, 1841. He was also appointed a member of a commission to negotiate treaties with the Sac and Fox Indians. He was a wise administrator as Governor of Iowa, but was a Whig in politics and was removed from office for political reasons when Polk became President in 1845. President Taylor appointed Mr. Chambers to negotiate a treaty with the Sioux Indians in 1849. Later in life he retired to his large farm near the city of Burlington, where he lived until a few years before his death, when he moved to Kentucky, dying there in 1852.

James Clarke was the third and last Territorial Governor of Iowa. He was born in Pennsylvania in 1812. When a boy, he learned the printer's trade and worked for a time in Harrisburg. In 1836, he went to St. Louis and engaged in newspaper work. Later, he was editor of the Belmont Gazette, and when the capital of Wisconsin was moved to Burlington he followed and was soon after appointed librarian of the territory. In 1839, President Van Buren appointed him Secretary of the Territory of Iowa. He served as Mayor of Burlington, and in 1844 was chosen as a delegate to the first convention for the making of a State Constitution. President Polk made him Governor of Iowa on November 18, 1845. Mr. Clarke served from the date of his appointment until the admission of Iowa Territory into the Union as a state on December 28, 1846. He died at Burlington on the 28th of July, 1850.

Ansel Briggs was the first State Governor and served for one term of four years. He was born in Vermont in February, 1806. During his early political career he belonged to the Whig party, but became a Democrat soon after coming to Iowa. In 1842, he was elected a representative in the territorial legislature from Jackson County. He was nominated as candidate for State Governor in the Democratic State Convention, at Iowa City, on September 24, 1846. Governor Briggs was a conservative in matters of party interest, and left the office in 1850 with the good wishes of both political parties. In 1870 he moved to Council Bluffs, and later lived with his son in Omaha, Nebraska, where he died in May, 1881.

James Wilson Grimes was the third Governor of the State of Iowa and was the first Governor after Lucas to become a national character. He was a New Englander by birth, having been born in New Hampshire in 1816. His grandparents were among the patriots of the American Revolution. He entered Dartmouth College in August, 1832, and remained a student there for three years. He came west in 1835 and settled in Burlington, which was then within Michigan Territory. He served for a time as secretary to the United States Commissioner of Indian affairs. Mr. Grimes was admitted to the bar in 1837, and was made city solicitor for Burlington near the close of the same year. He sat as a member of the First Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Iowa and was again elected to the Sixth Assembly of the Territory. Later, he was a member of the Fourth General Assembly of the state.

In 1854, the Whig party nominated Grimes for the office of Governor. He was elected and served from 1854 to 1858. The following year he was elected to the United States Senate from Iowa. In 1865, he was re-elected to Congress and sat as a judge in the impeachment trial of President Johnson, in which he voted "not guilty." Senator Grimes resigned his seat in 1869, because of failing health, and died at Burlington three years later on February 7, 1872. His inaugural address of December 9, 1854, displays a keen appreciation of the purpose of government and the duties of an executive officer. He declared the greatest object of government is to elevate and ennoble the citizen, and to disseminate intelligence and build up the moral energies of the people. To this end, Governor Grimes advocated an improved system for the state and was the first public officer in Iowa to advocate a district school library for every school district in the state.

Samuel Jordan Kirkwood was elected Governor of Iowa at a time when national issues were of so great importance as to overshadow local affairs in the states, and he is generally referred to as Iowa's War Governor. Kirkwood was a native of Harford County, Maryland, where he was born on December 20, 1813. His ancestors were of sturdy Scotch-Irish stock and his grandfather showed his patriotic spirit by enlisting in the Revolutionary War on the American side. In 1835, the Kirkwoods moved to Ohio, where Samuel worked on the farm in summer and taught rural schools in winter. He began the study of law when twenty-eight years old and two years later began the practice of law. In 1850, Mr. Kirkwood was chosen a member of the convention that framed a new Constitution for the State of Ohio. In 1855, he moved to Iowa and settled in Johnson County, where he deserted the law practice and engaged in farming and business. Besides having interest in a large farm, he owned a mill at Coralville and a store in Iowa City. In 1856, when the Republican party was first organized in Iowa, Mr. Kirkwood was a prominent member in the convention held at Iowa City, on February 22. Later in the same year he was elected to the State Senate and was re-elected in 1858. In 1859, he was chosen Governor by the Republican party and re-elected in 1861. In 1866, he was chosen United States Senator from Iowa to fill a vacancy of two years. In 1876, he was chosen by the legislature for the full term of six years, but was called to serve as Secretary of the Interior in President Garfield's cabinet in 1881. Soon after the death of Garfield he left the cabinet and retired to private life in Iowa City, where he died in 1894.

Governor Kirkwood was almost continually in public life for a quarter of a century, and no other man in the state ever enjoyed higher esteem or confidence than he did. During his two terms as Governor he organized and sent to the war more than sixty thousand citizen soldiers. In his first inaugural of January 11, 1860, he stated in emphatic terms his opinion on the subjects of states rights and slavery. In fact, his message was considered by the legislature to be radical and too expressive of his personal views on current questions, and the Senate passed a resolution protesting against a part of his message. His messages following at the regular and special sessions during the following three years show Governor Kirkwood to have been a man of good judgment and of clear conception of the grave questions facing the Nation and the states during the great Civil War.

John Henry Gear, who was born in Ithaca, New York, on April 7, 1825, was another Iowa Governor who later attained to national prominence. He had very slight educational advantages in his youth and gained most of his training by his own diligent study. In 1836, the Gear family moved to Galena, Illinois, where they lived for two years, when the father was appointed chaplain in the regular army and moved his family to Fort Snelling, Minnesota. In 1846, John Henry Gear journeyed by boat down the Mississippi River to Burlington, where he secured work, first as a farm hand, and later as clerk in a store. In 1850, he engaged in the mercantile business and continued a merchant up to the time of his more extensive public life. Mr. Gear was chosen Mayor of Burlington, in 1863, and was elected by the Republicans to the lower House in the fourteenth general assembly. He served three terms in succession and during the fifteenth and sixteenth assemblies served as Speaker. In 1877, he was elected Governor of the state on the Republican ticket and served two terms. In 1886, he was elected to the lower House of Congress and served two terms, during the last term of which he was a member of the Committee of Ways and Means. He was appointed Assistant Secretary of the Treasury by President Benjamin Harrison and resigned in 1892 to again take a seat in the Fifty-third Congress. He was a delegate to the Republican National Convention that nominated Harrison in 1892, and to the one that nominated McKinley in 1896. In 1895, Mr. Gear was elected by the state legislature to be United States Senator from Iowa and was re-elected to that office in 1901. His second term had not yet begun when he suddenly died, on July 14, 1901, in the city of Washington.

Mr. Gear was a man of sterling qualities and brought to the services of the state that executive ability that had made him successful in his self-reliant life. In his first inaugural address he favored the remonetization of silver and making it legal tender. He advocated larger appropriations for the educational, charitable and penal institutions of the state. All of his messages gave careful attention to education and its improvement, and he was among the earliest state officials to urge compulsory education in Iowa. As a federal officer his record in the Senate of the United States was that of a painstaking statesman, conservative and able.

William Larrabee was born in Ledyard, Connecticut, on January 20, 1832. His father was a graduate of West Point Military Academy and served with distinction in the War of 1812. The son William attended the common schools of his native state and at the age of nineteen years became a teacher. In 1853, he came to Iowa, settling in Clayton County, where he resumed teaching. He became interested in farming and later was owner and operator of the Clermont Mills in Fayette County. He soon became a large land owner and later gave most of his time to banking. In 1867, he was elected State Senator from Fayette County and remained in that office by successive re-elections for eighteen years. This long period of service made him a well-informed legislator and his influence was felt in the shaping of the legislation of the time. In 1881, he was a candidate before the Republican State Convention for Governor, but was not nominated. Four years later, he was elected to the governorship and two years after was re-elected. His administration is characterized as among the strongest in the history of the state. He urged and secured legislation regulating railroad transportation throughout the state and advanced the prohibition of the liquor traffic.

Mr. Larrabee's public career did not end with his second term as Governor. He traveled extensively in Europe and made a careful study of railroads and their management. In 1893, he published an able work, the "Railroad Question." When the State Board of Control for the management of state institutions was created, Mr. Larrabee was appointed a member and was chosen by the Board to be its president. In 1902, he was chosen Chairman of the Iowa Commission of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition.

Horace Boies, the thirteenth Governor of Iowa, was born in Erie County, New York, on December 7, 1827. The father was a farmer and the son worked on his father's farm and attended the common schools of his native state. Later he began the study of law and soon opened a law office in Hamburg, a town near Buffalo. In the year 1855, he was elected to the New York Legislature on the Republican ticket. In 1856, he left New York State and came to Iowa, settling at Waterloo. His law practice was supplemented with agricultural interests and he soon became a large land owner. In 1880, Mr. Boies left the Republican Party, not feeling longer able to support the party's principles relating to protection, and to questions of local importance. In 1889, he was nominated by the Democratic Party as candidate for Governor and carried the election by a large plurality. He thus had the distinction of being the first Democratic Governor in Iowa since Stephen Hempstead in 1850. He was re-elected for a second term in 1891, but by 1893, the Republicans, having modified their platform on local issues, were victorious at the polls, and Mr. Boies was defeated for a third term. He remained a leader in politics for several years and was in 1896 a candidate before the Democratic National Convention for President, but was defeated after receiving a very complimentary vote. Since that time he has given much attention to the care and improvement of his farms.

Leslie Mortier Shaw was born at Morristown, Vermont, November 2, 1848. He received his early education in the common schools of Vermont and at the academy at Morristown. His father moved to Iowa in 1869, and the son entered Cornell College, from which he graduated in 1874. Two years later he completed the law course in the Iowa College of Law. He soon after settled at Dennison, and later engaged in banking. In 1896, he became active in politics for the first time and made many campaign speeches during the campaign and election of President McKinley. In 1897, Mr. Shaw was elected Governor of Iowa and was re-elected in 1899. At the close of his second term in 1902, he was appointed by President Roosevelt to fill the office of Secretary of the United States Treasury, which office he held for five years. Since that time, Mr. Shaw has given his attention to business interests in New York City.

Governor Shaw was an earnest advocate of the gold standard in the National campaigns of 1896 and 1900 and was recognized as a political orator of great ability. It was largely through the reputation then gained that he was later called to serve in the President's cabinet. His messages as Governor of Iowa are logical statements of the existing conditions of the time, and sound in their recommendations of the needs of the state.

Albert Baird Cummins, the eighteenth Governor of Iowa, was born in Pennsylvania, February 15, 1850, and was of Scotch-Irish ancestry. He attended Waynesburg Academy, from which he graduated in 1869. He then moved to Elkader County, Iowa. He was, in turn, clerk in the county recorder's office, carpenter, railway express clerk and deputy surveyor, and was for a time the engineer in charge of the location and construction of the Northern Central Michigan Railroad. In 1873, he began the study of law in Chicago, and was admitted to the bar in January, 1875. In January, 1878, he removed to Des Moines, Iowa, and formed a law partnership with his brother. He soon attained a leadership at the bar and was elected president of the Polk County Bar Association, in 1890. He was a member of the Twenty-second General Assembly and served there two terms. He was temporary Chairman of the Iowa Republican State Convention in 1892, and was the same year chosen elector at large from the state. In 1896, he was a delegate to the National Convention at St. Louis and was elected National committeeman for four years.

In 1902, Mr. Cummins was elected Governor of Iowa, and was re-elected for a second and a third term, thus serving longer than any other Governor the state has yet had.

With the death of United States Senator Allison, in 1908, Mr. Cummins was chosen by the legislature to fill out the unexpired term, and was elected for the full term as United States Senator in 1909. Since that time, Senator Cummins has risen rapidly in prominence as a member of the upper House of the National Legislature and was, in 1912, mentioned as a candidate for President.

CHAPTER VI.

GOVERNMENTAL UNITS AND LOCAL DIVISIONS

The first essential in the study of government is that the student realize his relationship to the different units exercising authority over him. The strict enforcement of law is the safeguard of the liberties of the people under a republican form of government. Whenever two or more persons are associated together we find law necessary, for law defines the rights of each and protects each against the wrong-doing of the other. Law is not evil but good. The fact that law forbids A the right to steal B's horse is of equal benefit to A, for it also forbids B the right to steal A's horse. As the life of our people becomes more complex, so also must our laws become more complex and more detailed in their provisions. Before we had railroads in Iowa we had no need of laws governing their operation. Before automobiles were invented we had no thought of enacting laws regulating the speed at which they could be driven through the streets. If airships become practical in their use our state legislature will be required to enact laws governing their operation. So we find law is not something imposed upon the people, but rather it is that which the people agree to as the best means of securing their liberties and guarding their rights. Government may be variously defined. It is in fact the administration of law. "It is the organized means and power that a state or nation employs for the purpose of securing the rights of the people and of perpetuating its own existence."

If we look about us we soon find that the rules governing our conduct come from different sources. A pupil wishing to go to school is allowed to attend in one district but not in another. If one member of a family has a contagious disease other members of the family are not permitted to receive visitors so as to expose them to the disease of the sick member. If one lives in the country he is not required to shovel snow from the public highway, but if he lives in the city he may be compelled to clear the sidewalk of snow. Long bridges often contain signboards warning drivers not to drive faster than a walk over the bridge. If one man steals from another he may be arrested and fined or imprisoned. If we deface a silver coin, or if we counterfeit the money of the United States, we may be punished by fine or imprisonment, or by both. It is plain to see that while each of these offenses is punishable by law, the law is not always enacted or enforced by the same authority.

Units of Government. The fact is, we have different units of government, each active within its sphere to enforce the law and to protect the rights of the people. The lowest unit in this process of government is the school corporation, or school township. Next above the school township is the civil township. Then we have the municipality, which includes the government of towns and cities. The fourth unit of government is the county, which may be said to be a collection of civil townships. Then next higher is the state, consisting of a number of counties, and highest of all is the United States, which in turn is a collection of all the states. The individual citizen is subject to the authority of each of these units of government, and each unit has a claim on him for obedience to its governing rules. In turn the individual citizen is a part of each unit and has power to help govern and control the affairs in it.

Relation of Local Units. All of these four local units are political sub-divisions of the state. In some respects each is supreme within its own sphere of action and constitutes a body politic with a complete scheme of government. A school corporation has its own officers, it is a legal entity and may sue and be sued in the courts. It has original jurisdiction over school matters arising within its area. Its officers and voters make rules governing school organization and determine the amount of taxes to be paid for educational purposes. The civil township is another body politic, with a government of its own and officers to administer the laws. The township trustees are the legislature for the township. They constitute a Board of Health and may establish quarantines and make laws governing sanitary conditions. They act as a Board of Review for taxable property and may raise or lower taxes, subject only to the right of appeal to the district court. Here we find a second authority acting over the individual citizen and to a certain extent overlapping the authority of the school corporation. People living in towns and cities find themselves subject to still another authority because they are within the jurisdiction of another governmental unit. The inhabitants of these municipalities are as much subject to the laws of the school corporation and to the laws of the civil township as other people not living in the town or city, but the people living in the town or city have still another governmental authority over them. Towns and cities are also corporations and have powers to make and enforce laws. They furthermore have power to enact rules and regulations not made by any other political body. A person living in a town or city may be restrained from doing many things that are permitted to persons living in a rural community. The county is the highest of the local units of government, and the citizen owes obedience to the authority of the county as well as he does to that of the city, township or school corporation. The county is in turn a higher unit of government than the township and again has its own officers and its higher sphere of jurisdiction. Our state is divided into counties, and no matter where a person lives within the state he cannot escape the authority of the county. The county supervisors constitute the county legislature and may make laws governing matters not within the jurisdiction of the lower units of government.

Relation of Local Units to the State. We found each of the local units in the ascending scale exercising larger authority than the one lower down, and that each higher unit had a certain amount of authority over the unit below it. The state is but another unit in the ascending order of government. It must be remembered, however, that the state exercises a much greater authority than any of the local units and claims from the individual citizen a much greater share of obedience. The local units of government derive their powers from the Constitution and laws of the state. The state legislature, in accordance with the Constitution of the state, may increase or diminish the authority and powers of any of the local units. Counties were organized and established by acts of the legislature. Towns and cities were chartered and their rights and powers designated by legislative enactment. Townships and school corporations are established and governed according to laws made by the state legislature. All of the local units are administrators of state law rather than legislators for their own units. Even the officers of local units are not entirely local in their authority and power. A justice of the peace in a township may try petty offenses against the laws of the state, and county attorneys are the prosecutors of all criminal offenses committed against the laws of the state in the counties in which they are elected. Both of these officers are elected by the voters of the counties and the townships and are generally considered county and township officers, although they are in the broad sense state officers as well. In many respects the states exercise a much larger authority over the individual citizen than does the United States.

Relation to the Federal Government. There is yet another unit of government exercising authority over the individual citizen — it is the Federal Government. The citizen who gives obedience to the school corporation, to the civil township, to the city, the county and the state, is also bound by a still higher administrative power — the government of the United States. The Federal authority does not overlap the authority of the state, but it makes provision for those activities not coming within the jurisdiction of the states. When the Constitution of the United States was framed in 1787, certain powers were given to Congress alone. Many of these powers affect the individual citizen directly. The Federal Government requires that every letter contain a postage stamp, and if any person counterfeits the money or securities of the United States he is subject to severe punishment by the Federal authority.

When we think of government as a whole, it seems very complex and difficult to understand, but when considered in separate units, it becomes simple and easy of comprehension. A thorough study of local and state government gives a good foundation for the better understanding of the government of the United States.

Boundaries of Local Areas. The study of local government centers about these different physical areas we have called units of government. A school corporation has a definite area and fixed boundary line, subject to change by proper authority. Cities and towns are incorporated under laws of the state which determine their boundaries and the conditions under which they may be changed. Many of the counties were organized and laid out while Iowa was yet a territory. The legislature has the right to organize new counties. Previous to the revision of the Constitution in 1857, the legislature was unlimited in its power to establish new counties, and as a result we find some counties in Iowa more than double the area of others. The revised constitution provided that "no new county shall hereafter be created containing less than four hundred and thirty-two square miles." The township boundary is of a different origin and is based upon what is known as the Congressional township and upon the so-called Congressional Survey,

The Congressional Township had its origin in the land ordinance passed by Congress in 1785. This act of the Congress of the Confederation served the double purpose of locating lands and furnishing boundaries for local governments. It provided a system of government survey for the new territory belonging to the United States at the close of the Revolution. This Congressional survey did not apply to the land of the original thirteen states nor to Tennessee or Kentucky, as all these states were already surveyed and recorded under the old colonial system copied from England. Texas came into the Union with a system of its own taken from the Spanish system.

How Surveys are Made. Any meridian of longitude may be selected as a starting point. Generally a meridian in the immediate territory is selected. This meridian line, running north and south, is called a "principal meridian." At some convenient point on this principal meridian a line is drawn intersecting it at right angles and located on a parallel of latitude. This cross line is termed a "base line." Other lines are run parallel to the base line and six miles apart. Other lines are also run parallel to the principal meridian six miles apart. Thus the entire country is covered with a network of squares six miles on the sides and containing thirty-six square miles, which are called Congressional townships. Townships are designated by giving them numbers north or south of the base line and numbering them in ranges east or west of the principal meridian. Beginning at the intersection of the base line with the principal meridian, the square area of land just north of the base line and just west of the principal meridian is known as Township 1 north, range 1 west of the fifth principal meridian. Township A is located as Township 8 north, range 5 west of the fifth principal meridian. Township B is located as Township 6 north, range 3 east of the fifth principal meridian. Principal meridians and base lines are not located in accordance with any fixed system. In some instances they are near together and in others they are far apart. There are twenty-four principal meridians in the United States, six of them being known by numbers while the remainder are designated by names. The first principal meridian was established on the border line between the states of Ohio and Indiana, the second in Indiana, the third and the fourth in Illinois. The lands of Arkansas, Missouri, Iowa, Minnesota, and a part of the Dakotas are surveyed from the fifth principal meridian, which is located at the junction of the Arkansas with the Mississippi River. The base line crossing the fifth principal meridian is located at the junction of the St. Francis with the Mississippi River in Arkansas and runs near the city of Little Rock. All lands in the United States were not surveyed at the same time and as each new district was surveyed a new meridian was generally established. This accounts for so many meridians and the irregularity in their location.

Each township is six miles square and contains 23,040 acres of land. This area is too large for practical purposes and so the township is further divided into thirty-six squares by section lines drawn one mile apart each way. These squares are called sections and contain an area of one square mile or six hundred forty acres of land. The sections are divided into quarter-sections and each quarter may be again divided to such extent as is necessary. In Fig. 2, we have Township 8 north, range 5 west of the fifth principal meridian. The township is divided into thirty-six sections. The method of numbering the sections in a township, beginning in the upper right-hand corner, is to be noticed. The second part of the figure is Section 20 of that Congressional township divided into quarters and then into smaller divisions. The part X is located and described as follows: the south $\frac{1}{2}$ of the southwest $\frac{1}{4}$ of the southwest $\frac{1}{4}$ of Section 20, Township 8 north, range 5 west, of the fifth principal meridian. This tract of land is eighty rods long and forty rods wide and contains twenty acres. The superiority of this system of survey is the exactness by which a small piece of land may be located. A person coming to this country from a foreign land could be directed to this field of twenty acres without further information than the above given description of its location.

Method of Record. The regular method of designating land areas on legal instruments, such as deeds, is to abbreviate the terms used. The manner of describing the twenty acre tract above mentioned would be—The S. $\frac{1}{2}$ of SW. $\frac{1}{4}$ of SW. $\frac{1}{4}$ of Section 20, Twp. 8 N., R. 5 W. of 5th P.M. In locating a tract of land from the description given, we must begin with the last of the descriptive statement and work backward. In the above description we first turn to the map and locate the fifth principal meridian and its base line, then counting north from the base line and west from the meridian we locate the township; the section is then easily found from its number; then we look for the southwest quarter of the section; we next look for the southwest quarter of that quarter; finally for the south half of the last southwest quarter. A little practice will soon enable one to trace land tracts and determine the number of acres with accuracy.

Correction Lines. We learn in geography that meridians converge or come together as they proceed from the equator toward the poles. Therefore if two lines are drawn due north from two points on a parallel a distance apart they will come nearer together as they extend northward. In the latitude of Iowa, two lines, starting six miles apart and running due north six miles, will be three rods nearer together than at the starting point. If extended a greater distance the difference is still more — at thirty miles two lines will be fifteen rods nearer together. Townships being bounded by lines running due north are square only in theory. The fact is that all townships are narrower on the north side than on the south side. Only those townships laid out on a base line are exactly six miles on the south side. In order to prevent this converging of the east and west boundaries of townships from destroying the system surveyors run “substitute” base lines called “correction lines.” A correction line serves the same purpose as a new base line and the townships laid out on this correction line start again with a south boundary of exactly six miles. This correction makes a jog in the lines running north and accounts for the slight turns in roads following such lines. This difference increases as we proceed along the correction line east or west from the meridian.

It will not be out of place here to define what we mean by a Congressional township. It is “an area six miles square used for the purpose of locating land and forming the boundaries of local units of government.” It differs from a civil township and from a school township in that they are units in which civil government is carried out. A Congressional township has no political status. It has no officers or institutions, but is merely a physical division for the purpose of locating and measuring lands.

CHAPTER VII.

THE CIVIL TOWNSHIP

A Civil Township is an area of land the boundaries of which may or may not coincide with those of a Congressional township, and is used for the administration of local government. The boundaries of the civil township follow those of the Congressional township unless intercepted by deep rivers, or high impassable hills, such as would inconvenience the people in reaching their voting places or in transacting other township business. The chief object of the civil township as a unit of local government is for the holding of elections, listing of property, equalizing taxes, repairing roads, giving relief to the poor, and for conducting other local business. The local affairs of the township are administered by the following officers: three trustees, one clerk, two constables, two justices of the peace, and one assessor. Justices and constables are in a certain sense county officers, yet are elected by the township. All township officers are chosen for a period of two years by the qualified voters of the township at the November election.

Duties of Township Trustees. The trustees are entrusted with the following important matters: 1, taxes; 2, public highways; 3, elections; 4, health; 5, poor; 6, fences; 7, public money; 8, public buildings; 9, public grounds. The office of trustee, like other township offices, is not eagerly sought by the average citizen, and it is often difficult to find men in the township who are willing to give their time and attention overseeing the affairs of the township. The legislature has imposed a penalty of five dollars upon any person who, having been elected to a township office, refuses to qualify and serve — but no person is required to serve two terms in succession. The trustees have three regular meetings each year — the first Monday in February, in April and in November.

Elections. The trustees designate a place for holding township elections and the clerk gives notice of the time. The trustees are the election judges and together with the township clerk and another person, who is called clerk of elections, they make a list of all voters in the township. They have charge of the ballot box and register the names of the voters. They count the votes cast for each candidate, and in case of the township officers they declare who is elected. For all other officers they count the votes and send the results to the county supervisors. The trustees have the right to challenge any voter for cause and to demand proof of his qualifications to vote. The votes after being counted are kept by the clerk until after the legal time has elapsed for contesting the election. They are then sent to the county auditor.

Board of Equalization. If a tax-payer thinks the assessor has taxed his property unjustly, either too high or too low, he may appeal to the township trustees, who act as a Board of equalization and readjustment of the taxes levied by the township. The trustees meet on the first Monday in April each year for the purpose of revising or correcting the assessors' books. This Board of equalization may lower or raise the assessment complained of, according to their best judgment. If the aggrieved person is unwilling to accept the verdict of the Board of equalization he may appeal to the district court, if the appeal is made within twenty days after the adjournment of the Board. The power of the Board also extends to the listing of property not listed by the assessor.

Care of the Poor. The care and oversight of the poor is the duty of the county supervisors, but the poor of each township are generally cared for by the township trustees. The trustees administer the laws for the care of the poor within the township, but the entire expense is born by the county. If persons unable to provide for themselves move from one county to another they may be warned to return to their former home, but such warning must be given within a year of their arrival. If such person is in the county a full year before asking aid, he thereby gains "settlement" and the county is bound to support him. Aid is given to the poor in different ways. Almost all counties maintain a county farm or poorhouse, in which any deserving person may be cared for. The trustees may also give deserving persons assistance with money, food, clothes and medical attention in their homes. When a person is returned to the county from which he recently came it may be done at the expense of that county. If the trustees refuse aid to an applicant he may apply to the county supervisors, who may either aid him or order the township trustees to do so. All statements of expenses, whether issued by the trustees or by the supervisors, are sent to the county auditor. Near relatives of disabled persons may be required by law to care for them, and if the relatives refuse, the trustees or supervisors may bring action in the district court to compel them to do so.

Highways. Another duty of the township trustees is to care for the public roads. The road-tax is collected by the county treasurer and is given over to the township clerk. The law requires that all able-bodied male residents of the township, between the ages of twenty-one and forty-five years, give two days' labor on the roads each year. The trustees direct the expenditure of both the labor thus owing to the township and of the money raised by road-tax. Since 1903 each township constitutes one road district under the control of one or more road superintendents appointed by the trustees. Persons owing road service and road-tax to the township may pay either in labor or in money, or in both.

Health Officers. As health officers the trustees may pass regulations concerning nuisances and contagious diseases; they may require persons to be vaccinated; they may post notices of quarantine; they may require the removal of filth deemed to be injurious to health; they may adopt rules for the preservation of the health of the community, and enforce such rules by fines and imprisonment.

Miscellaneous Duties of Trustees. Several other duties are required of trustees, as the reports made to the county supervisors each year of public money expended; caring for township hall or other public buildings belonging to the township; viewing fences to determine whether legally constructed; assessing damages in case of trespassing of animals; providing and keeping up cemeteries; filling vacancies in the offices of justice of the peace and of constable; seizing property of persons deserting poor relatives.

The Township Clerk. The township clerk is the secretary of the Board of trustees and records the minutes of all their meetings. His records show the transactions of the trustees as election canvassers, health officers, and tax reviewers. He is the township treasurer and must give bonds to secure the township against loss. He must on each general election day post in a public place a statement, certified to by the trustees, of all moneys received and expended during the past two years. The clerk prepares from the assessment book a list of all persons required to pay poll-tax and furnishes a copy to the road superintendent. If the road superintendent does not collect all the tax he reports the delinquencies to the clerk, who in turn reports them to the county auditor before the second Monday in November. This tax is then collected by the county treasurer and paid over to the township clerk. The clerk administers the oath of office to other township officers. He posts notices of the result of township elections and notifies the county auditor of the persons elected. He receives and records the resignations of township officers, and his own resignation he gives to the Board of trustees. If a tie vote is cast for township officers, the clerk has the candidates appear before him and decide the case by lot. He has charge of all the material property of the township, such as books, records, and road machinery.

Justices of the Peace. Each township is entitled to two justices of the peace. They have power to try petty cases in both civil and criminal matters. They have jurisdiction over criminal cases involving not more than thirty days' imprisonment, or a fine of one hundred dollars, and over civil cases where the value in controversy does not exceed one hundred dollars, or, with the consent of both parties, the amount may be three hundred dollars. No record of the proceedings is kept except names of cases tried. A justice's court may have a jury of six men. He also has the power to hold inquests over dead bodies instead of the coroner; he may acknowledge deeds and mortgages; he must keep a record of estray stock taken up and advertised; he may perform marriage ceremonies.

Constables. Each township is entitled to two constables, who serve as peace officers. Together with marshals, police officers, sheriffs and deputy sheriffs, they are peace officers of the state as well as of the county and township. It is their duty to quell riots, to prevent crimes, to make arrests, and to serve the justice of the peace when he holds court. Constables serve warrants for arrests and to search property, and all notices legally directed to them by the trustees, clerk of the township, or the court of the county. The constable subpœnas witnesses, selects jurymen, makes arrests and does whatever the justice's court orders him to do. A private citizen may, without a warrant, arrest and take before a magistrate any person committing a crime in his presence; or if he knows that a felony or a crime punishable with confinement in a state prison has been committed, a private person may arrest, without a warrant, a person who he has reasons to believe committed the crime.

Assessor. Each township has one assessor. His chief duties are: to make a list of all taxpayers of the township and to fix the value of all property assessed by him; to make out a complete list of the voters of the township and give a certified copy of the same to the township clerk; to furnish the county auditor a list of all persons between the ages of eighteen and forty-five who are not exempt from military duties; to make a list of the children of deceased soldiers; and once in ten years to take the census of the county.

Each taxpayer is required by law to assist the assessor to make a complete list of the property he possesses. The taxpayer must make oath or affirmation that he has rendered a correct statement of all his property. For this purpose the assessor receives from the county auditor two assessment books to be kept in duplicate. In these books he lists the names of persons and a statement of their property, both real and personal, and the assessed value of the same. The assessor returns one of these books to the township trustees for examination, and for the purpose of equalizing taxes among the individuals of the township. The other book he returns to the county auditor as clerk of the Board of supervisors, who receives the books from all townships, compares the taxes as reported in them and equalizes the assessment between the townships.

Compensation of Officers. Township officers are usually paid according to three different methods—fees, per diem, and per cent. For regular official business the trustees receive two dollars per day each; for assessing damages, one dollar each; for viewing fences or locating ditch or drain, they are paid by the party having the work done. For regular official business the trustees are paid out of the county treasury. The township clerk receives for regular official business two dollars per day; for filing certain papers fifty cents each; for all money officially committed to him, five percent; for other work done his pay is regulated by the Board of supervisors. The assessor receives a compensation not to exceed two dollars per day. Justices of the peace are paid by fees fixed by law and they usually receive fifty cents each for serving warrants or issuing other documents. Constables are paid by fees ranging from ten cents to one dollar, besides traveling fees of five cents per mile going and returning by the nearest traveled route.

CHAPTER VIII.

THE COUNTY

A County is a subdivision of the state for the purpose of civil government. In Iowa there are ninety-nine counties. The earliest organized counties, including Des Moines and Dubuque in 1834, were established while Iowa was yet a part of Michigan Territory. The entire eastern part of the state was organized into counties by 1837. Several counties were established under the territorial government of Iowa — 1836-46. The Constitution of the state gave the legislature the power to establish new counties, and as amended in 1857 it provided that "no county shall hereafter be created containing less than 432 square miles." Fifty-two counties are rectangular in form and contain from twelve to sixteen congressional townships, with areas from 432 to 576 square miles in each. The remaining counties, located mostly along the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers, are irregular in form and vary in area. The state legislature has power to enact uniform legislation governing counties in Iowa, except in so far as the constitution has placed limitations upon the legislature in matters such as changing the boundaries, locating county seats, and allowing counties to contract debts. Boundaries between counties can only be changed with the consent of a majority of the voters of the counties affected and with the consent of the legislature.

The county offices are located and the business of the county is transacted at the county seat, a town or city located generally near the center of the county. The county capital, or the county seat, cannot be changed to another town unless a majority of the legal voters sign a petition to the supervisors of the county, who, upon receiving such petition, order an election. If at an election a majority of all votes cast is in favor of removal, the county seat is moved.

County Officers. The officers of a county are as follows: a Board of supervisors, consisting of three, five, or seven, the number being determined by the will of the voters of the county and not by its population or its size; an auditor, a treasurer, a recorder, a clerk of the district court, a county attorney, a sheriff, a superintendent of public instruction, a coroner, and an engineer. A county often has a Board on uniform text books, and such other temporary committees as may be necessary. All county officers except supervisors are elected for two years by the qualified voters; the supervisors serve three years. Notaries public are also found in every town and village. They are appointed by the governor and hold their commissions for three years.

County Supervisors. The Board of supervisors constitute the legislature of the county, and are the business managers of the county who have an oversight over all county officers. They may be chosen by the electors of the county on a general ticket, or the county may be divided into supervisor districts, one for each member. When the former method is used, no two supervisors can be chosen from the same civil township. In using the latter method the electors of each district vote for one supervisor from that district. The duties of the supervisors are varied and numerous and they hold five regular meetings each year, and such special meetings as the business of the county may require. All regular meetings are held at the county seat and occur on the first Monday after the general election each year and on the first Monday of January, April, June and September. The majority of the Board constitutes a quorum and may request a special meeting. The Board chooses its own chairman, who presides over the meetings and votes as any other member. Executive and legislative powers are not so clearly separated in the county as in the state and the county supervisors exercise both legislative and administrative functions. The powers and duties of the supervisors are determined by the state legislature and they may be expanded or contracted as the legislature may consider wise.

Powers and Duties of Supervisors. The powers and duties of the Board of supervisors are such as to give them the entire control of the affairs of the county subject only to the state legislature. Their chief powers include the following: to establish, organize and name townships; to provide the necessary buildings for the use of the county and the courts; to examine and settle all accounts of the receipts and expenditures of the county; to examine and settle claims against the county; to pass resolutions relative to the property of the county; to determine the salary of other county officers, to fix the bond of each and to determine the oath of office, as not otherwise fixed by law; to provide for the erection of county bridges and their repair; to locate all public highways; to determine the amount of tax for county purposes; to act as a Board of equalization between townships; to canvass the election returns reported from the townships; to care for the poor and to erect and care for the county farm.

County Buildings. The supervisors have charge of the erection, repair and care of county buildings, including a district court-house, a jail, a home for the poor and offices for county officials. If in building a court-house, jail, or bridge, the supervisors decide to expend more than $5000, they must first secure the approval of a majority of the voters of the county. If in purchasing land for the county, they expend more than $2000, they must have the consent of the voters. These requirements depend largely upon the population of the county, and in populous counties, the supervisors may expend $10,000, or even $15,000, without a vote of the people.

Care of the Poor. The care of the poor is the duty of the county supervisors, but the exercise of the power is often given to the township trustees. Temporary needs are generally met by the trustees, while those requiring permanent aid are cared for by the supervisors. The entire expense of the care of the poor is paid by the county. The supervisors administer aid by maintaining a county home or poor-farm under the charge of a steward. The supervisors may offer to the lowest bidder the care of poor people, or they may give them such food, medicine and clothing as they need in times of suffering. When paupers are sent to the county farm they are expected to contribute to their own support by such work as they are able to do. The insane of each county are sent to the state hospitals for treatment at the expense of the county, unless the relatives are able to pay. Each county has a commission of insanity, consisting of the clerk of the district court, and a physician and a lawyer appointed by the district judge. This commission determines the disposition of insane persons. In many counties the incurable insane are returned from the state hospitals to the county farms, where they are cared for.

The Auditor. The Auditor is the secretary of the county in all of its business transactions through the Board of supervisors. He keeps the minutes of all meetings of the supervisors, executes the orders of the Board, and records such matters as pertain to the county and sees that the minutes are published in some newspaper of the county. He has general custody of county property and buildings subject to the orders of the supervisors. The code of Iowa enumerates his duties as follows: "Record all proceedings of the Board in proper books provided for that purpose; make full entries of all its resolutions and decisions on all questions concerning the raising of money, and for the payment of money from the county treasury; sign all orders of the Board for the payment of money, and record in a book provided for that purpose, the reports of the county treasurer of the receipts and disbursements of the county; preserve and file all accounts acted upon by the Board, with its action thereon, and perform such special duties as are or may be required of him by law; to deliver to any person who may demand it a certified copy of any record or account in his office, on payment of his legal fees therefore." The auditor furnishes the poll-books for elections and prepares the official ballot for the county. The election judges of the various precincts make their returns to him. Copies of the assessors' books from every township and town of the county are filed with the auditor after being corrected by the Board of equalization. He also keeps a record of all the taxes voted in the school districts, townships, towns and county, and of the state tax to be collected in the county. He issues certificates of election to county officers and holds their bonds. Resignations from township and county officers are made to him. He draws warrants on the county treasurer and his books must always correspond to those of the treasurer in all matters of money records. He estimates the amount of tax to be paid by each taxpayer, and he gives a copy to the county treasurer, which is followed by him in collecting taxes. The county auditor also loans out the permanent school fund sent to him by the auditor of the state.

The compensation of the auditor is determined according to the population of the county. In counties having less than 10,000 inhabitants he receives $1200 per year. In counties having between 10,000 and 25,000 inhabitants he receives $1400. In counties having a population exceeding 25,000 the salary is determined by the Board of Supervisors.

The Treasurer. The county treasurer receives and cares for all the money collected by the county. All taxes are paid to him in the treasurer's office or to his deputies in different towns and then sent to the treasury. He receives from the auditor a list of the taxpayers and the amount of tax to be paid by each. He must then collect the taxes within a given time specified by law. It is his duty to keep a separate account with each taxpayer and of each fund that comes into his possession. He pays out money only on warrants signed by the county auditor, and thus each officer's books are a check upon those of the other. The supervisors require a heavy bond from each of these officers to insure the faithful performance of their duties, and the published account of the supervisors' proceedings shows the taxpayer what is done with the county's money. The county treasurer must keep an account of all receipts and disbursements in such form that they may be inspected by the Board of supervisors at any time.

The county treasurer is paid a percentage of the money collected by him together with other fees. If the entire amount exceeds $1500 per year the balance is returned to the treasury. If the population of the county does not exceed 10,000 the compensation of the treasurer cannot exceed $1300. If the population exceeds 30,000 the Board of supervisors may add additional compensation above $1500.

The Recorder. The county recorder keeps an exact record of all deeds, mortgages, articles of incorporation and other written instruments which may be delivered to him for record. When lands or houses are sold the person making the sale must render to the purchaser a written instrument called a deed. This deed is evidence that real estate has passed from one person to another, and contains the names of both seller and purchaser, the amount paid, and the amount of land and its location. This deed is presented to the auditor so the taxes may be assessed against the new owner; then it is given to the recorder for record. If the records have been well kept, the recorder's books will show a complete history of the titles of all lands within the county. The first owner of all lands, according to our records, is the United States Government. The first deed given — from the government to an individual — is called a patent. The first owner is assumed to still own the land, unless there is a public record showing the land has come into the possession of another person. An abstract of title to real estate is simply a very brief history of the ownership and transfers from the time the land belonged to the government down to the present owner. A mortgage is a conveyance of property, upon condition, as security for the payment of a debt or the performance of a duty, and to become void upon such payment or performance. Sometimes more than one mortgage is given on the same property, and in such case the mortgage first recorded must be first paid. To record a mortgage is therefore necessary to its full validity.

When a person buys real estate it is necessary to consult four different sources of authority to make sure the purchaser is in full possession of the property. First, it is necessary for the purchaser to consult the books of the county recorder to see if the property is free from mortgage. The purchaser must also find from the recorder's books if he has a clear title to his property, that is, if he can secure an abstract of title. Third, he must consult the treasurer's books to see if previous owners have paid the taxes as they became due. Fourth, he must consult the records of the clerk of the district court and see if the court has given any judgments against the property.

The office of recorder pays the least salary of all the county offices, and it is one of two county offices frequently filled by women. In counties of less than 25,000 inhabitants the salary is $1200. In counties over 25,000 people and not exceeding 35,000, it is $1500, and in counties of 60,000 or over, it is $2000.

The Clerk of the District Court. The county clerk is not the secretary of the county, as the name would signify, for that office is filled by the county auditor. The clerk is the secretary of the district court. All official business transacted by the district court held in the county is recorded by him. He must attend the sessions of the court either in person or by deputy. He makes a record of all suits entered in the court, all notices given, all witnesses subpoenaed, all juries impaneled, all decisions rendered, all judgments made and all executions issued. A judgment given by the court frequently affects the title to real estate. An unpaid judgment may form a lien upon any real estate the party may own or acquire. In all cases the party losing the suit is required to pay the costs.

The court has the authority to appoint executors, administrators and guardians. When the court is not in session the county clerk can appoint these officers. The clerk issues marriage licenses and records the same according to the laws of Iowa governing such licenses. He also records all births and deaths occurring within the county.

The general assembly of 1911 fixed the salary of the county clerk, ranging from $1100 to $3300, according to the population of the county. In the counties of 40,000 inhabitants or less, the county supervisors may add an additional sum of from $300 to $400.

The Attorney. The county attorney is the legal adviser of all county and township officers. Cities of the first and second classes have a city solicitor, who is the legal adviser of city officers and defends cases on behalf of the city. The county attorney prosecutes all cases in which the state is a party when arising either in the justices' court of the township, or in the district court of the county. When a case is appealed from the district court of the county to the supreme court of the state, the Attorney-General may continue the services of the county attorney if he chooses to do so. He assists the grand jury in gaining information and drawing indictments, and since 1911, he may upon his own sworn information prosecute criminal offenses to final judgment in the district or supreme court, if the punishment of such offenses exceeds a fine of $100 or thirty days' imprisonment.

The Sheriff. The office of county sheriff originated in early England. The head executive of the local government, called the Shire, was the Shire-reeve. The English shire corresponds to the American county. In Iowa, the sheriff is primarily the executive officer of the district court. He is subject to the orders of the court and serves all papers issued by the court, such as subpoenas for summoning witnesses, search warrants, and warrants for arrest. He may serve similar papers for lower courts. He attends the sessions of the district court, and it is his duty to open each session of the court each day. This he does in the familiar phrase — "Hear ye! hear ye! the district court of — County is now in session." He executes the judgments of the district court and carries out the orders of the district judge. Disobedience to the commands of the court constitute "contempt of court" and may be punished by fine or imprisonment.

The sheriff is in charge of the county jail and has the custody of all persons committed to it. He may make arrests in his own county, or in another county with the consent of that county. He is the peace officer of the county and may appoint deputies to assist him. He may, in extreme cases, form a posse comitatus to assist in restoring order. His compensation ranges from $2000 to $3000 per year, depending on the population of the county. He receives additional fees which he is allowed to collect for various services rendered. He generally is obliged to pay his deputy from the above compensation and fees.

The Superintendent. The county superintendent of schools has general oversight of school work in the county. The work of the office is not so extensive as formerly, owing to the fact that the issuing of certificates to teach is now almost entirely in the hands of the State Board of Educational Examiners. This Board makes out the questions for teachers' examinations and the papers are read and graded under the supervision of the state superintendent. The office is very important, however, in the help the superintendent is able to give to the teachers.

The county superintendent conducts the examination for teachers and sends the written papers to the Board at Des Moines. He makes recommendations as to the moral character and personal fitness of the applicant to teach. He assists school officials in selecting teachers, and aids teachers in finding schools. He holds a normal institute each year for the instruction of teachers and he may advise with teachers in appointed meetings as to the best methods of teaching. He gives assistance to local officers as to the location of buildings, the planning of buildings, caring for the grounds, and he hears and decides appeals of aggrieved parties concerning lands, or in matters of school discipline. An appeal may be taken from the decision of the county superintendent to the state superintendent in certain matters. The salary of the county superintendent is $1200 per year, but the supervisors may allow additional salary, besides a stipulated amount not to exceed $20 per month to defray expenses in visiting schools.

The Coroner. The title of coroner is no longer significant of the dignity and power that clothed that office in early England. In England, in early times, the coroner was the king's crowner, or the law officer who tried crown pleas in the courts. The coroner, as known among our county officers, has nothing to do with legal affairs other than the investigation of sudden deaths where uncertainty as to the cause prevails, or where suspicion of foul play exists. When a dead body has been found and there is reason to believe a crime has been committed, the coroner is informed and he at once summons a jury of three persons to hear evidence concerning the cause of death. He may subpoena witnesses and take testimony, after which the jury renders a verdict. The jury generally consists of a physician, a lawyer and one other person. If the jury designates any person as the perpetrator of the crime, the coroner must arrest that person and present him to the district court for trial. A justice of the peace may act as coroner in the absence of that officer. The coroner is paid by fees and he may succeed to the office of sheriff in case of a vacancy in that office.

The Engineer. The State Legislature of 1911 passed an act abolishing the office of county surveyor and created in place of it the office of county engineer. The reason for the change was due to the very small amount of surveying necessary to be done and the much greater need of an engineer to construct grades, ditches, roads and build bridges. The former duties of surveying lands and settling boundary disputes by locating lines is now a part of the county engineer's duty. The engineer is paid by fees, and when acting for an individual is paid by that person.

Taxes. Taxes in Iowa are levied by five different authorities — the state, the county, the township, the town or city and the school district. All of these taxes are assessed at the same time by the township or town assessor. Taxes may be paid in full between the first Monday in January and the first day of March; or they may be paid in two installments, the first half before the first day of March, and the second half before the first day of September. The first half is due the first day of March and becomes delinquent the first day of April. The second half is due the first of September and becomes due the first of October. After taxes become delinquent a penalty of one per cent per month is collected. If taxes are unpaid the county treasurer offers such real estate for sale at his office on the first Monday in December. Lands thus sold for tax may be redeemed if the owner pays all back taxes with interest before the end of three years.

An act of the general assembly of 1911 repealed the law passed a few years before, commonly known as the tax ferret law. That law provided that the supervisors of a county had the right to "contract in writing with any person to assist the proper officers in the discovery of property not listed and assessed as required by law." The law was severely criticised because of the alleged unfairness in its manner of operation and was repealed in 1911.

CHAPTER IX.

MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT

By municipal government we mean the government of towns and cities. In discussing governmental units we learned that government must become more detailed in its activities and more complex in its operation as people are brought together in larger numbers. The need of laws by people living in sparsely populated districts is comparatively small, but when many people live within a comparatively small area, such as a town or city, their needs are greatly increased. Rural roads need only to be well graded and drained, but city streets must be paved to make them passable in rainy weather. A township constable can generally maintain order in the township, while the city must have many policemen to guard the safety of the people. An automobile may be driven at a high rate of speed on a country road, but in the crowded city such speed would endanger the lives of the people. These few instances are sufficient to show the need of more carefully administered government in a city than what is required in the country.

Classification. Municipalities are divided into three classes, according to population. Cities of the first class, with a population of fifteen thousand and upwards; cities of the second class, with a population of two thousand and less than fifteen thousand; incorporated towns, with a population of less than two thousand. A village is a community of people living in about the same social relations as those living in a town, but which is not yet incorporated under the laws of the state. Some villages are as large as some incorporated towns.

Manner of Incorporation. When the people of a village wish to become an incorporated town, they may apply to the district court by presenting a petition signed by not less than twenty-five voters living within the area of the proposed town. The district judge may change or limit the area proposed to be incorporated. The court then appoints five commissioners, who give notice of an election and conduct such election within the proposed town. The commissioners act as the judges of election, and if a majority of all votes cast favor incorporation, the commissioners report such decision to the district court. The court then directs the same commissioners to hold another election for the necessary town officers.

When a town has two thousand or more people it may by automatic action become a city of the second class. That is, when the official census shows a town to have two thousand people, the town council may then follow the state law for the government and control of a city of the second class, and provides for such additional officers and makes such other changes as are necessary. When a city reaches fifteen thousand or more people, it may become a city of the first class by the same automatic action.

Control of Municipalities. Towns and cities in Iowa, and generally throughout the United States, are under the complete control of the state legislature. The legislature enacts laws giving them powers and privileges commensurate to their needs. It is generally assumed that such incorporated bodies have only such powers as are specifically given to them by state law. The chief arguments in favor of a village becoming an incorporated town are: it increases the privileges of the people for good government; and it enables them to levy greater taxes for town improvements. The chief objection is that it increases taxes.

Officers. In an incorporated town the officers comprise: a mayor; a council of five members elected at large; a clerk, a treasurer, and an assessor, elected by the people for two years. There is also a street commissioner appointed by the council, and a marshal appointed by the mayor. Other officers may be appointed as are necessary.

In cities of the first and second classes the council consists of one member elected from each ward and two elected at large. Cities of the second class are divided into wards, not less than three or more than seven. The clerk is chosen by the council instead of by the people. The city also has a solicitor chosen by the people. A marshal, deputy marshal and police officers are appointed by the mayor, with approval of the council, and hold office at the pleasure of the mayor. Any city having a population of four thousand or more may, at its own discretion, have a superior court. In 1911, there were seven such cities. If the city has thirty thousand people it may have a Board of public works.

A city of the first class has elective officers as follows: a mayor; council, solicitor, treasurer, auditor, city engineer, assessor, and where there is no superior court, a police judge. The council appoints a clerk, a physician, a street commissioner, and when necessary, a wharf-master. The mayor appoints a marshal, who is, ex-officio, chief of police, and as many policemen as the council by ordinance may direct. The officers appointed by the mayor hold office during his pleasure; those appointed by the council, at the first meeting after the biennial election, hold office for two years. Other officers may be provided for by the mayor and council.

Powers of the Council. The town or city council is the legislative and the controlling body of the municipality. It has power to enact ordinances to promote the safety, health, property, order, comfort, convenience, and to improve the morals of the community. The council provides for paving, cleaning and lighting streets and alleys; for city water, light, sewerage, parks, libraries and playgrounds; they legislate against nuisances, regulate slaughter houses, determine the construction of buildings and the care of cemeteries. The council may also grant licenses to saloons, billiard halls, theatres, circuses, shows, auctioneers, pedlers, etc. It may also prescribe regulations for hotels, restaurants, bus lines, etc. It may prescribe the width of tires on vehicles used on the streets and may designate which streets may be used for heavy teaming. All ordinances must be passed by the council and signed by the mayor, unless passed over his veto. Ordinances must be published in some newspaper in the city as soon as enacted, or they may be posted in at least three public places. A violation of an ordinance constitutes a crime against the town or city and is subject to punishment by a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars, or by imprisonment not exceeding thirty days.

Elections. The regular elections in Iowa towns and cities are held biennially, on the last Monday in March. The council divides the city into precincts and determines one voting place in each precinct. It also appoints judges and clerks, and conducts the election in about the same manner as the general election. Any qualified voter having a legal residence in the city or town and having lived ten days in the precinct may vote. All cities having a population of 3500 or more require all voters to register before voting. The object is to prevent those from voting who do not possess the legal qualifications. The city council appoints one person from each of the two political parties having polled the largest number of votes at the last general election, to act as registers in each voting precinct. These registers meet in each precinct on the Thursday prior to the general election. Before presidential elections the places of registration are open for three days, other elections, two days. All persons wanting to vote at the general election must appear before the register and present evidence that he is qualified to vote in that precinct. His statement of qualifications is registered in a book kept for that purpose.

Cities under Special Charters. Previous to the revision of the Constitution in 1857, the state legislature granted special charters to some towns in Iowa, which have since continued to govern themselves under those charters. They are five in number and include, Davenport, Dubuque, Glenwood, Muscatine, and Wapello. The charters are not alike and are subject to the control of the legislature the same as are other cities.

Commission Plan of Government. Municipal government in the United States has not proven as satisfactory in its operation as has the government of other political units. Cities are generally populated by a variety of people. Slum districts are filled with irresponsible people who are easily led and influenced by demagogues and political bosses. The expenditures necessary to carry on city government are enormous. For these and other reasons city government is often corrupt in character and extravagant in expenditures. To remedy these defects, various plans of government have been suggested. Some people believe greater executive control on the part of the state to be the solution of bad city government, and advocate the appointment of mayors and councilmen by the state. Other people believe home rule will better remedy the abuses. During the past few years a system of city government known as the commission plan has been tried throughout the country. Galveston, Texas, seems to be the most successful of the western cities in this plan of government. It has been adopted by cities in Iowa, and is now in operation in Des Moines, Cedar Rapids, Burlington, Fort Dodge, Keokuk, Marshalltown, and Sioux City. This plan of government was first provided for by the legislature in 1907. This first act applied only to cities of 25,000 or over, but in 1909, it was extended to cities having a population of 7000 or more.

Government by Commission. Under this plan of government the control of the city is given to a commission still retaining the name council. In cities of 25,000 or more the commission consists of a mayor and four councilmen, while in cities of 7000 and less than 25,000 it consists of a mayor and two councilmen. The elections, both primary and general, are non-partisan, and any qualified voter may become a candidate and stand for election. In the primary election each voter may vote for one of the candidates for mayor. The two persons receiving the highest number of votes become the candidates for mayor in the general election. From the candidates for councilmen in the primary each voter may vote for eight in cities of 25,000 population or over, and for four in cities of less than 25,000. In the general election the mayor is chosen from the two candidates, and the councilmen are chosen from the eight candidates, or from the four candidates, as the case may be.

The affairs of the city are grouped under five different departments, designated by the following names:

1. Department of Public Affairs.
2. Department of Accounts and Finance.
3. Department of Public Safety
4. Department of Streets and Public Improvements.
5. Department of Parks and Public Property.

The mayor is at the head of the first department and a councilman heads each of the other departments. In cities having only three members in the commission each councilman has charge of two departments. Each member of the commission is designated as superintendent of his department. Each commissioner has charge of his own department, and is responsible for the success and conduct of it.

He recommends appointments for his department and these are acted upon by the council.

New Features. The principle of recall is operative in the commission plan of government. If any commissioner is charged with corruption or negligence in the administration of the affairs of his department, he may be removed from office and another person elected in his place. The process of removal requires that a petition requesting his recall be signed by twenty-five per centum of the voters and be presented to the city clerk. An election is then held to choose a successor. The removed officer may again be a candidate. The person receiving the highest number of votes is elected. A second new feature in this plan of government is the initiative and the referendum by which the people may demand and obtain direct legislative power. If a proposed ordinance is submitted to the council, accompanied by a petition signed by a number of voters equal to twenty-five percentum of the votes cast for all the candidates for mayor at the last general election, the council must pass the ordinance without alteration, or they must submit it to the vote of the electors within a given time. The people may also demand that an ordinance passed by the council be submitted to them for approval or rejection, in the same manner.

Advantages. The commission plan of government has the following advantages. It makes the mayor and council directly responsible to the voters and subject to their recall; it does away with ward politicians, as councilmen are all chosen at large; it gives the people the power to initiate legislation and to approve or reject the council's ordinances; it tends towards expert government because the commissioners are paid to give full time to the work of the city; the better class of people have an opportunity to defeat any ward in its attempt to send unworthy men to the council.

Compensation. The salary paid to city officials is determined by the population of the city. The mayor's salary ranges from $600 in cities of less than 10,000 inhabitants to $3500 in cities of over 60,000. The compensation of councilmen ranges from $450 to $3000, according to the population.

CHAPTER X.

PUBLIC EDUCATION

Early Provisions. In his first message to the territorial legislature, in 1838, Robert Lucas recommended "the establishing, at the commencement of our political existence, of a well-digested system of public schools." This led to the passage of a law authorizing the organization of public schools, which went into effect January 1, 1839. It provided that free schools should be opened to free white children between the ages of four and twenty-one. The Constitution of 1846 contained an article on education and school lands. This Constitution also provided "that the legislature shall provide for a system of common schools by which a school shall be kept up and supported in each school district at least three months in every year." It also declared that the legislature should provide for the establishment of libraries as soon as the circumstances of the state would permit. The legislature of 1854 revised and improved the school laws, giving more power to the people and to the Boards and a larger fund out of which to pay teachers and contingent expenses. This act marked the first rapid growth and expansion of public elementary education. The office of city superintendent and the high school now appeared.

School Areas. Iowa at present contains four different kinds of school areas. (1) The school township is the largest local school unit. It generally coincides in size and boundaries with the civil township. It is generally subdivided into sub-districts, although it may exist as an independent district township without division. When the township is regular in size and is sub-divided, it contains nine sub-districts. Sometimes smaller townships contain only eight or seven sub-districts. (2) The independent school district, as the term is applied to a town or city, is the second kind of school area. It varies in size and may consist of but one sub-district of the township, or it may include two or more sub-districts, depending on the size of the incorporated area of the town or city. This kind of district may be formed upon the presentation of a written petition of any ten voters of a city, town or village of over one hundred residents to the Board of the school township in which the portion of the town plot having the largest numbers of voters is situated; such Board shall establish the boundaries of a proposed independent district. (3) Rural independent districts may be formed upon a written request of one-third of the legal voters of the sub-district after giving a notice of thirty days. If a majority of voters cast their votes in favor of independent districts, then each sub-district of the township becomes a rural independent district and calls a meeting to choose three directors to serve for one, two and three years respectively. A single sub-district cannot become independent unless it contains a village, town or city. (4) Sub-districts are the divisions of a school township. If the township is regular in size it will contain nine sub-districts. Sub-districts are not school corporations as are the three first mentioned school areas. Each sub-district elects one sub-director, who is the administrative officer of the district. He meets with other sub-directors in the regular township meetings.

Changes in Organization. We have seen how a school township consisting of sub-districts may change into an independent school township, and how any district containing a village, town, or city may become independent; also that the sub-districts of a school township may become rural independent districts by a majority vote of the legal voters of the township. The law also provides that upon a majority vote of all the people of the township the independent rural districts may again become sub-districts of a school township. School government in incorporated towns and cities is not changed by the change made in school townships or in sub-districts. Towns and cities are given exclusive control of their school affairs as one of the privileges given under incorporation.

School Directors. In the regular school township each sub-district elects one director. If the township contains an even number of districts, one director is elected at large. These sub-district directors are elected in meetings held on the first Monday in March in each district. The independent town and city districts elect their directors the second Monday in March. Cities of the first class have seven directors each, while cities of the second class and cities under special charter have five. Rural independent districts elect directors on the second Monday in March as do the towns and cities. A few of the most populous rural independent districts in Iowa choose five directors, while all others choose three each.

School Meetings. The different school districts hold three different kinds of meetings. The first meeting is for the election of directors and is one of the most democratic in character of all meetings in American government. At this meeting all qualified voters assemble, and not only vote for directors and other officers, but they may at the same time exercise large legislative functions. In these meetings women have the right to vote on all questions concerning the issuance of bonds. Women may also be chosen directors or other school officers. In sub-districts this meeting is held on the first Monday in March. In all other districts it occurs on the second Monday in March. The second kind of meeting is the organization meeting, at which the school Boards are organized and at which general Board business is taken up. In villages, towns, and cities this meeting occurs on the third Monday of March, while in rural independent districts, independent townships, and school townships it occurs on the first day of July. The third kind of meetings held by school corporations are special meetings. Such meetings may be called by giving ten days' notice. The sale of school property, the purchase of sites, the construction of buildings and the obtaining of roads may be arranged for in these special meetings.

Powers of the Boards. The school Boards have very extensive power in the control of the school interests over which they preside. The Board cares for school property, chooses sites for school buildings and erects the same. The Board may divide the district, if necessary, and determine which school the pupil may attend. It may also unite districts or establish union or graded schools. The Board prescribes the course of study for the schools and makes rules governing the sub-district directors, officers and teachers. It must keep a careful account of all receipts and expenditures of money and publish the same each year. The Board makes annual estimates of the amount of taxes necessary to carry on the schools. It must also provide instruction for at least six months in each year for all persons of school age. It may, if the voters so choose, furnish free books to all indigent children who would otherwise be deprived of school advantages. The voters at the annual meeting may instruct the Board to carry out such further regulations as the people of the district may wish. The law of 1890 empowers the Board to purchase and furnish to the pupils at cost school books and other supplies.

County Board of Education. The county superintendent, the auditor, and the Board of supervisors constitute a Board of education for the county. Upon the receipt of a petition signed by one-half the school directors of the county, the Board may provide for the holding of an election to decide whether or not there shall be uniform text-books. If uniform text-books are adopted, the Board must decide upon the books to be used, to purchase them and to sell them to the directors of the districts. County uniformity does not apply to towns and cities.

State Board of Education. This Board will be discussed in Chapter XV., as regards its composition, duties and powers. The duties of the Board, as defined by statute, are: to exercise complete control over the four state institutions — the University, the Teachers College, the Agricultural College and the College for the Blind. The Board, however, exercises a far greater influence over education in the state than merely to control these four institutions. In determining the entrance requirements to the first three institutions, the Board practically fixes a standard for every high school in the state. By determining the standard and quality of instruction in the state institutions, the Board also determines the standard and quality of instruction in practically all other colleges of the state. All standard colleges of the state will gradually come to accept the rulings of the State Board of Education as regards entrance qualifications, equipment, quality of instruction and conditions for graduation. The high schools will necessarily need to meet the requirements of the Board in order to gain entrance for their graduates into the colleges. The grades, in turn, are slightly affected by the changed requirements of the high schools.

State University of Iowa. The University was established February 25, 1847, and was located at Iowa City. It is maintained and controlled by the State of Iowa and stands at the head of the public school system. The University is under the administration of the State Board of Education, consisting of nine members, and a Finance Committee of three members appointed by the Board. The immediate control of the institution is under the charge of the president and the faculty. The University comprises the following colleges: Liberal Arts, Graduate College, Law, Medicine, Homeopathic Medicine, Dentistry, Pharmacy, Fine Arts; and the schools of Political and Social Science, Education, Music, Library Training, and Nurses.

State Teachers College. The Teachers College was established in 1876, and was located at Cedar Falls. This college is also under the control of the State Board of Education. It is a teachers' school, and limits its instruction to courses particularly planned for all kinds of public school teachers. The courses furnish instruction for primary teachers, kindergarten, physical training, manual training, domestic science, music and general grade and high school teachers.

State College of Agriculture. This college was established in 1868, and is under the control of the State Board of Education. It is located at Ames. Courses are given in mechanical, electrical, mining and civil engineering; in dairying and animal husbandry; in agriculture and horticulture; and in general science and in domestic science. A large and well-equipped experiment station is a part of the institution.

CHAPTER XI.

THE COST OF EDUCATION

Financial Support for Education. Large sums of money are required every year to pay the expenses of education in the schools and colleges of Iowa. Buildings must be erected and furnished; heat, light and supplies must be provided; salaries of teachers must be paid and other incidental expenses must be met. The money used to pay these expenses is derived from the following sources: land grants made by the Federal Government to the state; money grants made by the Federal Government to the state; appropriations made by the state legislature; special taxes on assessed valuation of taxable property in the state levied by acts of the state legislature; ordinary and special school taxes voted by the electors in school districts; money paid as an equivalent from exemption from military duty; the clear proceeds of fines collected for breaches of the penal laws; the proceeds of lands escheating to the state.

Land Grants from the Federal Government. In July, 1840, while Iowa was still a territory, Congress passed an act granting two townships of land to the territory to be used for the support of a territorial university. This has been known as the University Grant. On September 4, 1841, Congress granted to each of the states 500,000 acres of land for internal improvements, and when Iowa framed its Constitution, provision was made to use this amount of land for school purposes rather than for some other form of internal improvement. On March 3, 1845, the National Government passed an act, providing that the sixteenth section of every township in Iowa should be granted to the state for the use of schools. This was known as the Sixteenth Section Grant and contained about 1,104,331 acres. Also on March 3, 1845, the National Government granted to the State of Iowa all the salt springs within the state to a number not to exceed twelve, and with each spring six sections of land. The number of springs located was seven and the amount of land obtained in this way was 46,202 acres. In 1853, the legislature provided that this land should be sold for the benefit of the schools. This grant of land was called the Saline Land Grant. On March 3, 1845, Congress further provided that five entire sections of land should be set aside for the purpose of completing the public buildings of the state. This land was also later sold in accordance with an act of the legislature and the proceeds used to establish an Agricultural College and Farm. This grant was known as the Five Section Grant. In 1850, Congress passed an act giving to the state a large amount of land known as the Swamp Land Grant. In accordance with this act about 1,660,556 acres of lands have come into possession of the state and have been turned into the public school fund. On July 2, 1862, Congress passed another act by which the United States gave to each state in the Union a large tract of land for the establishment and maintenance of a College of Agriculture. The total amount of this land in Iowa was about 204,309 acres. This became known as the Agricultural College Grant. Of all this land obtained by the state from the Federal Government, the greater part has already been sold and the money forms the permanent school fund of the state. Some land still remains unsold and is at present held by the state; it is rented out to reliable citizens and the rent paid into the school fund.

Money Grants from the Federal Government. The Federal Government has on three different occasions made large money donations to Iowa for the further support of education. The first was made in 1845, and was supplemental to an act admitting Iowa into the Union. It is known as the Five Percent Fund and amounted to about $580,475. The second grant of money was made on August 30, 1890, and is known as the Second Morrill Act Fund. This act provided $15,000 annually to the State Agriculture College. Since 1900, the amount paid annually is $25,000. In 1887, Congress appropriated an annual sum of $15,000 to be used establishing and maintaining an experiment station in connection with the Agricultural College in each state.

Appropriations made by the State Legislature. The legislature has made many appropriations for the three state institutions of Iowa. The earliest appropriation made by the legislature was on March 11, 1858, when a law was enacted appropriating $3000 for the purpose of repairing and fitting up the old capitol building at Iowa City. A few days later, on March 22, 1858, the first appropriation of money for the State Agricultural College was made by the legislature. The first appropriation for the State Teachers College was made on March 17, 1876, when the sum of $14,000 was authorized for the fitting up of the institution at Cedar Falls. From these early dates up to the present time the state legislature has made regular biennial appropriations for the support of these three educational institutions. The sums appropriated yearly at present are of course much larger than in the beginning of the institutions.

Special Taxes Levied by the Legislature. In addition to the appropriations for the support of the three state institutions, the state legislature has at different times voted special taxes of a fractional part of a mill on each dollar of assessed valuation of taxable property of the state. Such tax was first voted for the University on March 17, 1896. It was to continue for four successive years, and the proceeds were to be used for building purposes. A similar tax was levied in 1900 for the Agricultural College and in 1900 for the Teachers College.

School Taxes Voted by Electors. The electors in each school district may vote sums in addition to what other sources of revenue yield as are found necessary. The Board of directors may estimate the additional sum necessary for the year, and also declare the amount necessary for a contingent fund. For the building of school-houses the law requires that the tax shall be voted by the electors at the annual meeting. The amounts determined upon by the directors, together with what is necessary for buildings, are certified by the county auditor to the Board of county supervisors, and they levy upon the respective districts the taxes voted in each. These taxes are collected along with the other taxes of the county.

The amount of money that may be expended in any one year for the support of schools is limited by law. Not more than twenty dollars may be expended in any year from the teachers' fund for each person of school age. Not more than seven dollars for each person of school age may be expended from the contingent fund. The law does, however, authorize a levy of two hundred and seventy dollars for the teachers' fund and seventy-five dollars for the contingent fund, even if it exceeds twenty-seven dollars respectively per pupil for these funds. Tax for the school fund is limited to ten mills on the dollar for all taxable property within the corporation. If the amount voted by the school township is insufficient in any school district, that district may by a majority vote of the electors at an annual or special election increase the rate, but not to exceed fifteen mills on the dollar. In levying this tax, the county supervisors must apply the levy to property within the district only. The electors of the district may authorize the directors to meet a still further need of money for building purposes, by borrowing money and issuing bonds of the corporation. For the payment of such borrowed money the assessment must not exceed five mills on the dollar levied on the property within the district.

Other Sources of Support for Schools. The Constitution of Iowa makes the following provision for additional support for the public schools. The money which may have been or shall be paid by persons as an equivalent from exemption from military duty, and the clear proceeds of all fines collected in the several counties for any breach of the penal laws, shall be exclusively applied, in the several counties in which such money is paid or fine collected, among the several school districts of said counties, to the support of common schools, or the establishment of libraries, as the Board of education shall from time to time provide, and all estates of deceased persons, who may have died without leaving a will or heir, shall revert to the permanent school fund of the state.

The Control and Management of School Funds. The General Assembly of the State of Iowa has control over the permanent school fund of the state and may enact laws for its care and distribution. We have already observed that this permanent school fund arises from three sources: the proceeds of the sales of the public lands which the state received from the Federal Government; the proceeds from the sales of escheats; fines and forfeitures which the state secures in the administration of justice. The financial agents of the school fund are the same as by law receive and control the state and county revenue for other civil purposes. The state and county auditors are in charge of the permanent school fund and distribute the income for the maintenance of common schools to the district in proportion to the number of youths between the ages of five and twenty-one years. This basis is obtained by the secretary of the school Board in each district, who must each year make a list of names of all persons within these limits of age. The principal of the permanent fund is loaned out, through the state and county auditors, to reliable persons giving first mortgages on real estate. All these officers are heavily bonded and loans are made only on land securities, which leaves little chance for loss of funds. The legislature has further enacted that the state must make good any loss sustained by the permanent school fund. If any loss occurs the state is obliged to accept such as part of the state's indebtedness and must pay into the school fund each year such amount as equals the interest on the part lost.

The permanent school fund is kept on interest under the management of the state and county auditors. The state auditor apportions the school fund to the several county auditors to be loaned out on interest. If the county auditor does not succeed in loaning out his portion, it is the duty of the state auditor to remove the money to some other county. The interest collected by the county auditors is sent to the state auditor, who apportions it among the county auditors according to law for the use of the schools. The amount of the permanent school fund of the state is over four million dollars.

The treasurer of each school district receives the apportionment of the permanent fund allowed to his district from the county auditor. The treasurer must keep the money thus entrusted to him under separate accounts with three distinct funds: the school-house, the contingent, and the teachers' fund. The teachers' fund is the most constant and the largest.

CHAPTER XII.

STATE GOVERNMENT

The term "State," or "Commonwealth," as used in this chapter, may be defined as a political division of the United States, or as a body politic, a constituent member of the Union. The state has almost entire control of all the ordinary activities of the people living within its border. In very few respects do the citizens of our state come in contact with the powers or authority of the Federal Government. The authority exercised by our state government is so great as to control practically all our actions in our relations to each other.

Constitution Defined. The highest law of the state is called the Constitution. It is sometimes defined as "the supreme law of the state." We must not, however, confuse the term "constitution" with the term "law" as it is ordinarily used, meaning an act passed by the legislature. The Constitution is a supreme plan of government and differs from an ordinary law in the following respects; a constitution is made by the whole people, through their delegates, sitting in a convention for that purpose, and is afterwards ratified or accepted by the people, while a law is made by the people's representatives and the people themselves have no direct voice in the matter; a constitution can only be revised or amended by a vote of the people given at a general election, while a law may be repealed or amended by the legislature itself; a constitution is a general plan of government and states in general terms how the people may be governed, while a law relates to a specific subject and states in detail the rules governing certain actions; for example, the Constitution says, "No law shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech or of the press," which is a general statement concerning these privileges of the people; but our legislature has enacted laws defining these terms and fixing the penalty for their violation or abuse.

The Code of Iowa. The general assembly meets in regular session every two years and during each session passes many legislative acts or laws. Sometimes old laws are repealed as well as new ones enacted. When all the laws in force at any time are collected and printed in book form, such collection is called the code of Iowa. Thus the code consists of all the laws in force in the state at any given time and forms a convenient volume for the use of lawyers, judges, and other officials. This collection of laws is so large that it is impracticable for any person to attempt to become familiar with all of them. It is sufficient for the student of civics to learn to use the code and to find any particular law to which his attention may be directed.

The Constitution of Iowa. We have just learned that the constitution is the sovereign will of the people and that it represents more than the voice of the people expressed in legislation. The constitution lays down the fundamental principles of government and restricts the lawmakers and chief officials of the state, compelling them to act in accordance with the will of the people as expressed in their fundamental document.

We learned in Chapter IV. that the Constitution of Iowa was made in a convention of the people meeting at Iowa City, and that it was adopted by the people at an election held August 3, 1846. This Constitution served the state without change until 1856, when the people voted to revise it, and another convention was called for that purpose in January, 1857. The present Constitution was made in that convention and was adopted by the people August 3, 1857. It has since been changed by amendment, but has not been further revised. The Constitution of Iowa may be analyzed and studied under the following articles and heads:

PREAMBLE

We, the People of the State of Iowa, grateful to the Supreme Being for the blessings hitherto enjoyed, and feeling our dependence on Him for a continuation of those blessings, do ordain and establish a free and independent government, by the name of the State of Iowa, the boundaries whereof shall be as follows:

the middle of the main channel of the said Des Moines River, to a point on said river where the northern boundary line of the State of Missouri—as established by the Constitution of that state, adopted June 12, 1820—crosses the said middle of the main channel of the said Des Moines River; thence westwardly along the said northern boundary line of the State of Missouri, as established at the time aforesaid, until an extension of said line intersects the middle of the main channel of the Missouri River; thence up the middle of the main channel of the said Missouri River to a point opposite the middle of the main channel of the Big Sioux River, according to Nicolett's map; thence up the main channel of the said Big Sioux River, according to the said map, until it is intersected by the parallel of forty-three degrees and thirty minutes north latitude; thence east along said parallel of forty-three degrees and thirty minutes, until said parallel intersects the middle of the main channel of the Mississippi River; thence down the middle of the main channel of the said Mississippi River to the place of beginning.

CHAPTER XIII.

THE CONSTITUTION OF IOWA

A Bill of Rights is a statement of the fundamental rights of the people. It enumerates such recognized rights and privileges as are generally understood to belong to the people under a republican form of government. They are rights conceded to belong to all people irrespective of class or condition, and are such as would be claimed by any free intelligent people. The Bill of Rights originated in the early English charters when the people formulated a statement of their fundamental rights and privileges and then forced the kings to recognize those rights. Magna Charta, in 1215, was a charter of this kind, and the Bill of Rights agreed to by William and Mary in 1688 doubtless contained the origin of the name.

ARTICLE I. — BILL OF RIGHTS

RIGHTS OF PERSONS. Section 1. All men are, by nature, free and equal, and have certain inalienable rights, among which are those of enjoying and defending life and liberty, acquiring, possessing, and protecting property, and pursuing and obtaining safety and happiness.

POLITICAL POWER. Sec. 2. All political power is inherent in the people. Government is instituted for the protection, security, and benefit of the people, and they have the right, at all times, to alter or reform the same whenever the public good may require it.

RELIGION. Sec. 3. The general assembly shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; nor shall any person be compelled to attend any place of worship, pay tithes, taxes, or other rates, for building or repairing places of worship, or the maintenance of any minister or ministry.

RELIGIOUS TEST. Sec. 4. No religious test shall be required as a qualification for any office of public trust, and no person shall be deprived of any of his rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified from the performance of any of his public or private duties, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of his opinions on the subject of religion; and any party to any judicial proceeding shall have the right to use as a witness, or take the testimony of, any other person, not disqualified on account of interest, who may be cognizant of any fact material to the case; and parties to suits may be witnesses, as provided by law.

DUELING. Sec. 5. Any citizen of this state who may hereafter be engaged, either directly or indirectly, in a duel, either as principal or accessory before the fact, shall forever be disqualified from holding any office under the Constitution and laws of this state.

LAWS UNIFORM. Sec. 6. All laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation; the general assembly shall not grant to any citizen, or class of citizens, privileges or immunities, which upon the same terms shall not equally belong to all citizens.

LIBERTY OF SPEECH AND THE PRESS. Sec. 7. Every person may speak, write and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that right. No law shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech, or of the press. In all prosecutions or indictments for libel, the truth may be given in evidence to the jury, and if it appear to the jury that the matter charged as libelous was true, and was published with good motives and for justifiable ends, the party shall be acquitted.

PERSONAL SECURITY. Sec. 8. The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable seizures and searches, shall not be violated; and no warrant shall issue but on probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons and things to be seized.

Section 1 of the Bill of Rights is copied from the Declaration of Independence, and is not an exact statement of the intended meaning. The statement refers to the equality of men before the law or in respect to the influence of government rather than to their equality as individuals. In every republican government the real political power must be inherent in the people, for the people make the government. The Constitution of the United States places no restrictions upon the state concerning the freedom of religious belief and worship and the state Constitution therefore protects the people in this freedom and forbids the legislature to enact laws restricting one's religious beliefs or manner of worship. The punishment for dueling in Iowa has been greatly extended by legislative act. If one person kills another in a duel he may be charged with murder in the first degree and punished accordingly. The uniformity of law requires that laws must apply to all people under the same conditions in all parts of the state. A law would be void if it granted privileges to the people of one county of the state which were under the same conditions denied to those of another. A false statement intended to injure the reputation of another person, when uttered, is called slander, and when written is called libel. A person is by law subject to punishment for either offense. An officer with a search warrant is permitted to search only for the thing specifically mentioned in the warrant, or for the person whose name is therein contained.

TRIAL BY JURY; DUE PROCESS OF LAW. Sec. 9. The right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate; but the general assembly may authorize trial by a jury of a less number than twelve men in inferior courts; but no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law.

RIGHTS OF PERSONS ACCUSED. Sec. 10. In all criminal prosecutions, and in cases involving the life or liberty of an individual, the accused shall have a right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury; to be informed of the accusation against him; to have a copy of the same when demanded; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for his witnesses; and to have the assistance of counsel.

WHEN INDICTMENT IS NECESSARY. Sec. 11. All offenses less than felony, and in which the punishment does not exceed a fine of one hundred dollars, or imprisonment for thirty days, shall be tried summarily before a justice of the peace, or other officer authorized by law, on information under oath, without indictment or the intervention of a grand jury, saving to the defendant the right of appeal; and no person shall be held to answer for any higher criminal offense, unless on presentment or indictment by a grand jury, except in cases arising in the army or navy, or in the militia, when in actual service, in time of war or public danger.

The Federal Constitution guarantees to the individual the right of trial by jury in Federal courts, but that right does not extend to the courts of the states. Section 9 of our state Constitution guarantees the right of jury trial in the state courts. The regular trial jury in a district court consists of twelve men. A jury in a justice's court may consist of six men; a coroner's jury may consist of three men. Due process of law means according to law. In a criminal prosecution the accused person must be present and face the trial. If illness prevents his attendance at court, the trial must stop until he is again able to be present. Ordinary offenses tried in the district court were, previous to 1911, brought only through the action of a grand jury. In 1911, the legislature provided that such indictment may be presented by the grand jury as formerly, or it may be presented through sworn information given by the county attorney. Public offenses are classified as: (1) felonies, (2) misdemeanors. Felony is such offense as may be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary. Public offenses less severely punished are called misdemeanors.

Justice of the Peace. A justice of the peace may try all public offenses in which the punishment prescribed by law does not exceed a fine of $100 or thirty days' imprisonment in the county jail, or with the consent of both parties the sum in controversy may be $300. These cases may be tried without a jury unless demanded by the accused person. If a jury is demanded, six men are chosen by order of the justice, and these constitute a jury. If a person commits a more serious crime, such as felony, and is thereby liable to punishment by imprisonment in the penitentiary, the justice has power to conduct a preliminary examination. If the evidence shows probable guilt, the justice may commit the prisoner to the county jail until the meeting of the grand jury. In most crimes the offender has the right of bail, the amount of which the justice may determine.

Change of Venue. Either in an actual trial, or in a preliminary examination of a charge of felony, the accused has the right to a change of venue. If he declares upon oath that he believes he cannot secure a fair trial before the present justice and states the reason why, he is given the right to a hearing before the next nearest justice in the same county. Only one change of venue is allowed. Any person tried in a justice's court may, if dissatisfied with the judgment, have the case retried in the district court.

TWICE TRIED; BAIL. Sec. 12. No person shall, after acquittal, be tried for the same offense. All persons shall, before conviction, be bailable by sufficient sureties, except for capital offenses, where the proof is evident or the presumption great.

HABEAS CORPUS. Sec. 13. The writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended or refused when application is made as required by law, unless in case of rebellion or invasion, the public safety may require it.

MILITARY. Sec. 14. The military shall be subordinate to the civil power. No standing army shall be kept up by the state in time of peace; and in time of war no appropriation for a standing army shall be for a longer time than two years.

QUARTERING SOLDIERS. Sec. 15. No soldier shall, in time of peace, be quartered in any house without the consent of the owner, nor in time of war except in the manner prescribed by law.

TREASON. Sec. 16. Treason against the state shall consist only in levying war against it, adhering to its enemies, or giving them aid and comfort. No person shall be convicted of treason unless on the evidence of two witnesses to the same overt act, or confession in open court.

BAIL; PUNISHMENT. Sec. 17. Excessive bail shall not be required, excessive fines shall not be imposed, and cruel and unusual punishment shall not be inflicted.

No person tried by regular judicial process and acquitted can be tried again for the same offense, no matter what errors the court may have committed. If an accused person is convicted he may under certain conditions be granted a new trial. A writ of habeas corpus is an order issued by a judge and directed to a jailer commanding the jailer to produce the prisoner in court and show why he should be imprisoned. Such writ may issue against anyone who retains another against the other's wishes. The civil authority is supreme in the state until the civil authority itself asks that the military authority supersede it. The militia in Iowa is seldom called into action except to quell strikes and riots. The Constitution of Iowa limits treason to two specific acts. One is levying war against the state, the other is giving aid to an enemy actually attacking the state. No one shall be convicted of treason unless upon the evidence of two persons who saw the act committed. If a judge requires bail to the amount of $1000 for the offense of stealing chickens, it would be considered excessive because that amount is out of proportion to the crime committed. If a convicted person were sent to jail as punishment for an offense committed and the jailer were to beat him or mutilate his body, the punishment would be excessive and the jailer would be liable to arrest and punishment.

EMINENT DOMAIN. Sec. 18. Private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation first being made, or secured to be made, to the owner thereof, as soon as the damages shall be assessed by a jury, who shall not take into consideration any advantages that may result to said owner on account of the improvement for which it is taken.

The general assembly, however, may pass laws permitting the owners of lands to construct drains, ditches, and levees for agricultural, sanitary or mining purposes, across the lands of others, and provide for the organization of drainage districts, vest the proper authorities with power to construct and maintain levees, drains, and ditches, and to keep in repair all drains, ditches and levees heretofore constructed under the laws of the state, by special assessments upon the property benefited thereby. The general assembly may provide by law for the condemnation of such real estate as shall be necessary for the construction and maintenance of such drains, ditches and levees, and prescribe the method of making such condemnation.

(By proper action of the legislature (31 G. A., joint resolution No. 1 and 32 G. A., joint resolution No. 2) the foregoing paragraph was submitted to vote of the electors at the general election of 1908, and was by them adopted.)

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT. Sec. 19. No persons shall be imprisoned for debt in any civil action, or mesne or final process, unless in case of fraud; and no person shall be imprisoned for a military fine in time of peace.

PETITION. Sec. 20. The people have the right freely to assemble together to counsel for the common good; to make known their opinions to their representatives, and to petition for a redress of grievances.

ATTAINDER; EX POST FACTO LAW; OBLIGATION OF CONTRACT. Sec. 21. No bill of attainder, ex post facto law, or law impairing the obligation of contracts, shall ever be passed.

RESIDENT ALIENS. Sec. 22. Foreigners who are, or may hereafter become residents of this state, shall enjoy the same rights in respect to the possession, enjoyment, and descent of property, as native-born citizens.

SLAVERY. Sec. 23. There shall be no slavery in this state; nor shall there be involuntary servitude, unless for the punishment of crime.

RESERVATION OF RENTS. Sec. 24. No lease or grant of agricultural lands, reserving any rent or service of any kind, shall be valid for a longer period than twenty years.

RIGHTS RETAINED. Sec. 25. This enumeration of rights shall not be construed to impair or deny others, retained by the people.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS. Sec. 26. (No person shall manufacture for sale, or sell, or keep for sale, as a beverage any intoxicating liquors whatever, including ale, wine and beer. The general assembly shall by law prescribe regulations for the enforcement of the prohibition herein contained, and shall thereby provide suitable penalties for the violation of the provisions hereof.)

(The foregoing amendment was adopted at a special election held on June 27, 1882. The supreme court, April 21, 1883, in the case of Koehler and Lang vs. Hill, and reported in 60th Iowa, page 543, held that owing to certain irregularities the same was not legally submitted to the electors, and did not become a part of the Constitution.)

The right of eminent domain is the right of the state to take private property for public purposes upon paying a just compensation to the owner. If the owner refuses the compensation offered by the state, a commission is appointed to appraise the value of the property. The owner still has the right of appeal to the district court. Freedom from imprisonment for debt does not shield the person who fraudulently contracts debts. Every body or community of people has the right of petition to those above them in authority. Students have the right to petition the teacher or the faculty. A petition is only a request and has no force as a legal command. A bill of attainder is a legislative act declaring a man guilty of a criminal offense without trial or even in his absence. An ex post facto law is a legislative act which makes an act a crime that was not a crime at the time it was committed. Resident aliens are foreigners who live within the state, but who have not become naturalized citizens. If a criminal is sentenced to jail or to the penitentiary, he may be compelled to work without being enslaved. The rapid changes in economic and social conditions make long time leases of land unjust.

CHAPTER XIV.

THE CONSTITUTION OF IOWA

ARTICLE II — RIGHT OF SUFFRAGE

ELECTORS. Section 1. Every male citizen of the United States, of the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been a resident of this state six months next preceding the election, and of the county in which he claims his vote, sixty days, shall be entitled to vote at all elections which are now or hereafter may be authorized by law.

PRIVILEGED FROM ARREST. Sec. 2. Electors shall, in all cases except treason, felony, or breach of the peace, be privileged from arrest on the days of election, during their attendance at such elections, going to and returning therefrom.

FROM MILITARY DUTY. Sec. 3. No elector shall be obliged to perform military duty on the day of election, except in time of war or public danger.

PERSONS IN MILITARY SERVICE. Sec. 4. No person in the military, naval, or marine service of the United States shall be considered a resident of this state by being stationed in any garrison, barrack, or military or naval place or station within this state.

INSANE. Sec. 5. No idiot or insane person, or person convicted of any infamous crime, shall be entitled to the privileges of an elector.

BALLOT. Sec. 6. All elections by the people shall be by ballot.

GENERAL ELECTION. Sec. 7. The general election for state, district, county, and township officers shall be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November.*

*The foregoing Section was submitted to vote of the electors at the general election in 1884, and by them adopted.

Section 1 states clearly the qualifications for voting in Iowa. It should be remembered that United States citizenship is necessary for voting in Iowa. Some states do not have this requirement. The legislature has been urged to pass an amendment to the Constitution granting female suffrage, and the sentiment favoring women voting seems to be growing in Iowa. At present women may vote on the issuance of bonds for school purposes and for local improvements, such as bonding cities for the building of hospitals, etc. The term, breach of the peace, has a very broad meaning and the voter has but little liberty by Section 2. The chief value of the provision is to warrant against plots or false accusations to detain voters when on their way to the polls. Troops known as United States regulars, stationed within the state, are not privileged to vote, although possessing the ordinary qualifications. A person sentenced to the penitentiary in Iowa loses his right to vote until such right is again restored to him by the governor. The Australian ballot system, which consists of a printed ballot containing the names of the candidates for all parties, is used in Iowa. The voter enters a booth and in secret marks the ballot and folds it ready for the ballot box.

ARTICLE III—OF THE DISTRIBUTION OF POWERS

DEPARTMENTS OF GOVERNMENT. Section 1. The powers of the Government of Iowa shall be divided into three separate departments — the legislative, the executive, and the judicial — and no person charged with the exercise of powers properly belonging to one of these departments shall exercise any function appertaining to either of the others, except in cases hereinafter expressly directed or permitted.

Every republican government recognizes the doctrine of the separation of powers. The theory is that government will be better administered and remain more nearly immediately responsible to the people if the authority is well distributed among three departments. These departments are known as the Executive, the Legislative, and the Judiciary. The legislative department is the law making branch of the government, and it not only enacts laws, but it provides ways and means for carrying them into effect. The executive branch of the government looks after the actual doing of things and executes or enforces the laws and regulations passed by the legislature. Laws are not always well understood, sometimes they lack clearness when made, and often laws are not obeyed when understood. For that reason laws need to be interpreted, and offenses committed by people in violation of the law must be punished — therefore we have need of a third department — the judicial department, consisting of the courts.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY. Section 1. The legislative authority of this state shall be vested in a general assembly, which shall consist of a senate and house of representatives; and the style of every law shall be, "Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Iowa."

SESSIONS. Sec. 2. The sessions of the general assembly shall be biennial, and shall commence on the second Monday in January next ensuing the election of its members, unless the governor of the state shall, in the meantime, convene the general assembly by proclamation.

The legislative department is, in some respects, the most important department of the government. In the United States it is called Congress; in the state it is the general assembly; in the county it is the board of supervisors; in the township it is the board of trustees; and in the town or city it is the council. The local Boards in counties, townships, and school corporations, and the councils in towns and cities are executive as well as legislative bodies. Much of the success of good government depends upon the wisdom of the law-makers and upon the general assembly of Iowa depends much of the success and progress of our people. The legislature must not only enact new laws as they are necessary, but it must change old ones as conditions necessitate, and repeal others as they are found unsatisfactory or inadequate. The bicameral form of legislature, that is, two branches, is now universal. The governor may call an extra session of the general assembly any time he thinks the best interests of the state require. The regular biennial session generally lasts about ninety days.

REPRESENTATIVES. Sec. 3. The members of the house of representatives shall be chosen every second year, by the qualified electors of their respective districts, on the second Tuesday in October, except the years of the presidential election, when the election shall be on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, and their term of office shall commence on the first day of January next after their election, and continue two years, and until their successors are elected and qualified.*

ELIGIBILITY. Sec. 4. No person shall be a member of the house of representatives who shall not have attained the age of twenty-one years, be a male citizen of the United States, and shall have been an inhabitant of this state one year next preceding his election, and at the time of his election shall have had an actual residence of sixty days in the county or district, he may have been chosen to represent.†

SENATORS. Sec. 5. Senators shall be chosen for the term of four years, at the same time and place as representatives; they shall be twenty-five years of age, and possess the qualifications of representatives as to residence and citizenship.

NUMBER AND CLASSIFICATION. Sec. 6. The number of senators shall not be less than one third nor more than one half the representative body, and shall be so classified by lot that one

* By the amendment (Sec. 7) inserted at the end of Art. II, the election now occurs uniformly in November.

† By an amendment to the Constitution adopted by vote of the electors at the general election in 1880, the words "free white" were stricken from the third line of this Section.

class, being as nearly one half as possible, shall be elected every two years. When the number of senators is increased they shall be annexed by lot to one or the other of the two classes, so as to keep them as nearly equal in numbers as practicable.

ELECTIONS DETERMINED. Sec. 7. Each house shall choose its own officers, and judge of the qualifications, election, and return of its own members. A contested election shall be determined in such manner as shall be directed by law.

QUORUM. Sec. 8. A majority of each house shall constitute a quorum to transact business; but a smaller number may adjourn from day to day, and may compel the attendance of absent members in such manner and under such penalties as each house may provide.

Senators and representatives are chosen at the general election in November, in even numbered years. Senators serve for four years and representatives for two years. Senators are divided into two classes, twenty-one being elected at one general election and twenty-nine at the next election. The purpose of a four year term for senators was doubtless to give greater stability to the legislature. The Constitution, by Article III, Section 35, fixed the number of representatives at 108. These are chosen from the 99 representative districts — each county constituting a district. The nine most populous counties have two representatives each. Senatorial districts consist of from one to four counties. Counties forming a district must be contiguous. The last redistricting was done in 1905.

AUTHORITY OF THE HOUSES. Sec. 9. Each house shall sit upon its own adjournments, keep a journal of its proceedings and publish the same; determine its rules of proceedings, punish members for disorderly behavior, and with the consent of two-thirds expel a member, but not a second time for the same offense; and shall have all other powers necessary for a branch of the general assembly of a free and independent state.

PROTEST. Sec. 10. Every member of the general assembly shall have the liberty to dissent from or protest against any act or resolution which he may think injurious to the public or an individual, and have the reasons for his dissent entered on the journals; and the yeas and nays of the members of either house, on any question, shall, at the desire of any two members present, be entered on the journals.

PRIVILEGE. Sec. 11. Senators and representatives, in all cases except treason, felony, or breach of the peace, shall be privileged from arrest during the session of the general assembly and in going to or returning from the same.

VACANCIES. Sec. 12. When vacancies occur in either house the governor, or the person exercising the functions of governor, shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies.

DOORS OPEN. Sec. 13. The doors of each house shall be open, except on such occasions as, in the opinion of the house, may require secrecy.

ADJOURNMENTS. Sec. 14. Neither house shall, without the consent of the other, adjourn for more than three days, nor to any other place than that in which they may be sitting.

BILLS. Sec. 15. Bills may originate in either house, and may be amended, altered, or rejected by the other; and every bill having passed both houses, shall be signed by the speaker and president of their respective houses.

APPROVAL. Sec. 16. Every bill which shall have passed the general assembly, shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the governor. If he approve, he shall sign it; but if not, he shall return it, with his objections, to the house in which it originated, which shall enter the same upon their journal, and proceed to reconsider it; if, after such reconsideration, it again pass both houses, by yeas and nays, by a majority of two-thirds of the members of each house, it shall become a law, notwithstanding the governor's objections. If any bill shall not be returned within three days after it shall have been presented to him (Sunday excepted), the same shall be a law in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the general assembly, by adjournment, prevent such return. Any bill submitted to the governor for his approval during the last three days of a session of the general assembly, shall be deposited by him in the office of the secretary of state within thirty days after the adjournment, with his approval, if approved by him, and with his objections, if he disapproves thereof.

MAJORITY VOTE. Sec. 17. No bill shall be passed unless by the assent of a majority of all the members elected to each branch of the general assembly, and the question upon the final passage shall be taken immediately upon its last reading, and the yeas and nays entered on the journal.

RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES. Sec. 18. An accurate statement of the receipts and expenditures of the public money shall be attached to and published with the laws at every regular session of the general assembly.

IMPEACHMENT. Sec. 19. The house of representatives shall have the sole power of impeachment, and all impeachments shall be tried by the senate. When sitting for that purpose, the senators shall be upon oath or affirmation; and no person shall be convicted without the concurrence of two-thirds of the members present.

WHO LIABLE TO; JUDGMENT. Sec. 20. The governor, judges of the supreme and district courts, and other state officers, shall be liable to impeachment for any misdemeanor or malfeasance in office; but judgment in such cases shall extend only to removal from office, and disqualification to hold any office of honor, trust, or profit under this state; but the party convicted or acquitted shall nevertheless be liable to indictment, trial, and punishment according to law. All other civil officers shall be tried for misdemeanors and malfeasance in office, in such manner as the general assembly may provide.

MEMBERS NOT APPOINTED TO OFFICE. Sec. 21. No senator or representative shall, during the time for which he shall have been elected, be appointed to any civil office of profit under this state, which shall have been created, or the emoluments of which shall have been increased during such term, except such offices as may be filled by elections by the people.

DISQUALIFICATION. Sec. 22. No person holding any lucrative office under the United States, or this state, or any other power, shall be eligible to hold a seat in the general assembly. But offices in the militia, to which there is attached no annual salary, or the office of justice of the peace, or postmaster, whose compensation does not exceed one hundred dollars per annum, or notary public, shall not be deemed lucrative.

FAILURE TO ACCOUNT. Sec. 23. No person who may hereafter be a collector or holder of public moneys, shall have a seat in either house of the general assembly, or be eligible to hold any office of trust or profit in this state, until he shall have accounted for and paid into the treasury all sums for which he may be liable.

MONEY DRAWN. Sec. 24. No money shall be drawn from the treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law.

COMPENSATION OF MEMBERS. Sec. 25. Each member of the first general assembly under this Constitution shall receive three dollars per diem while in session, and the further sum of three dollars for every twenty miles traveled in going to and returning from the place where such session is held, by the nearest traveled route, after which they shall receive such compensation as shall be fixed by law; but no general assembly shall have the power to increase the compensation of its members. And when convened in extra session they shall receive the same mileage and per diem compensation as fixed by law for the regular session, and none other.

WHEN LAWS TAKE EFFECT; PUBLICATION. Sec. 26. No law of the general assembly, passed at a regular session, of a public nature, shall take effect until the fourth day of July next after the passage thereof. Laws passed at a special session shall take effect ninety days after the adjournment of the general assembly by which they were passed. If the general assembly shall deem any law of immediate importance, they may provide that the same shall take effect by publication in newspapers in the state.

DIVORCE. Sec. 27. No divorce shall be granted by the general assembly.

LOTTERIES. Sec. 28. No lottery shall be authorized by this state; nor shall the sale of lottery tickets be allowed.

ACTS; ONE SUBJECT; EXPRESSED IN TITLE. Sec. 29. Every act shall embrace but one subject, and matters properly connected therewith, which subject shall be expressed in the title. But if any subject shall be embraced in an act which shall not be expressed in the title, such act shall be void only as to so much thereof as shall not be expressed in the title.

LOCAL OR SPECIAL LAWS. Sec. 30. The general assembly shall not pass local or special laws in the following cases:

For the assessment and collection of taxes for state, county, or road purposes;

For laying out, opening, and working roads or highways;

For changing the names of persons;

For the incorporation of cities and towns;

For vacating roads, town plats, streets, alleys, or public squares;

For locating or changing county seats.

The legislature of 1911 fixed the compensation of senators and representatives at $1000 per session, with mileage at the rate of $3 for every twenty miles traveled in going to and returning from the seat of government. When an extra session is called the compensation is to be at the same rate per day as for the preceding regular session (but it must not exceed $6 per day), with mileage as for regular sessions. The presiding officer of the state senate is the lieutenant-governor, and he is called the President of the Senate. He receives double the salary of a member. He has full power as a presiding officer, but does not vote except in case of tie. The senate chooses a president pro tempore, who presides in the absence of the lieutenant-governor. The house of representatives chooses a presiding officer from among its members and he is called Speaker. He is elected by a party vote and has great influence over legislation because of his extensive powers. He appoints all committees and places on committees such friends as he thinks will respect his wishes in matters of legislation. He votes on all questions except in case of tie.

Both house and senate facilitate business by means of the committee system of legislation. In the house committees are appointed by the speaker and in the senate by the president. During the thirty-fourth general assembly the house had sixty-two standing committees and the senate had forty. The most important committees are those on Ways and Means; Appropriations; Judiciary; Railroads; Banks and Banking, etc. In addition to the above-named standing committees, select committees are named as they are needed, and joint committees may be appointed from both houses. All bills are, as a rule, referred to committees before acted upon by either house. The report of the committee carries great influence with the members. A chairman of a committee may exercise great influence over legislation by his attitude towards a bill. He may kill the bill by refusing to call the committee together, unless the whole house calls for the bill.

Vacancies in either house are filled by the governor issuing a writ of election and directing it to the district in which the vacancy occurs. The people in that district then proceed to elect another member.

LAWS GENERAL AND UNIFORM; BOUNDARIES OF COUNTIES.

In all the cases above enumerated, and in all other cases where a general law can be made applicable, all laws shall be general and of uniform operation throughout the state; and no law changing the boundary lines of any county shall have effect until, upon being submitted to the people of the counties affected by the change, at a general election, it shall be approved by a majority of the votes in each county cast for and against it.

EXTRA COMPENSATION. Sec. 31. No extra compensation shall be made to any officer, public agent, or contractor, after the service shall have been rendered, or the contract entered into; nor shall any money be paid on any claim, the subject-matter of which shall not have been provided for by pre-existing laws, and no public money or property shall be appropriated for local or private purposes, unless such appropriation, compensation, or claim be allowed by two-thirds of the members elected to each branch of the general assembly.

OATH OF MEMBERS. Sec. 32. Members of the general assembly shall, before they enter upon the duties of their respective offices, take and subscribe the following oath or affirmation: "I do solemnly swear (or affirm, as the case may be) that I will support the Constitution of the United States, and the Constitution of the State of Iowa, and that I will faithfully discharge the duties of senator (or representative, as the case may be) according to the best of my ability." And members of the general assembly are hereby empowered to administer to each other the said oath or affirmation.

CENSUS. Sec. 33. The general assembly shall, in the years one thousand eight hundred and fifty-nine, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-three, one thousand eight hundred and sixty five, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine, and one thousand eight hundred and seventy-five and every ten years thereafter, cause an enumeration to be made of all the inhabitants of the state.

NUMBER AND APPORTIONMENT OF SENATORS. Sec. 34. The senate shall be composed of fifty members to be elected from the several senatorial districts established by law, and at the next session of the general assembly held following the taking of the state and national census they shall be apportioned among the several counties or districts of the state, according to population as shown by the last preceding census.

REPRESENTATIVE DISTRICTS. Sec. 35. The house of representatives shall consist of not more than one hundred and eight members. The ratio of representation shall be determined by dividing the whole number of the population of the state as shown by the last preceding state or national census by the whole number of counties then existing or organized, but each county shall constitute one representative district and be entitled to one representative; but each county having a population in excess of the ratio number, as herein provided, of three-fifths or more of such ratio number, shall be entitled to one additional representative, but said addition shall extend only to the nine counties having the greatest population.*

RATIO OF REPRESENTATION. Sec. 36. The general assembly shall, at the first regular session held following the adoption of this amendment, and at each succeeding regular session held next after the taking of such census, fix the ratio of representation and apportion the additional representatives as herein before required.

DISTRICTS. Sec. 37. When a congressional, senatorial, or representative district shall be composed of two or more counties, it shall not be entirely separated by any county belonging to another district; and no county shall be divided in forming a congressional, senatorial, or representative district.

ELECTIONS BY GENERAL ASSEMBLY. Sec. 38. In all elections by the general assembly the members thereof shall vote viva voce; and the votes shall be entered on the journal.

* Sections 34, 35, and 36 were submitted to the voters at the general election held in November, 1904, and adopted as amendments.

CHAPTER XV.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT

Importance of the Executive Department. The executive department is generally conceived of as the most important department of the government. We get this impression because it is the department most seen. The greater number of officials of the state belong to the executive department. This is easily understood when we begin to enumerate those actually found in the state, the county, the cities and towns, and in the school corporations. In the total they number many thousands.

The actual importance of the executive work in the state government is frequently exaggerated. So much of the work of the government is actually carried on by the officials of the local units, such as counties, cities and towns, and townships, that the general executive duties of the governor and state officials are not so great. The chief duty of the governor is to see that all the laws of the state are faithfully executed, and however important may be his influence over legislation, his chief duty is to see that laws are enforced rather than to help make them.

ARTICLE IV. — EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT

GOVERNOR. Section 1. The supreme executive power of this state shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled the Governor of the State of Iowa.

ELECTION AND TERM. Sec. 2. The governor shall be elected by the qualified electors at the time and place of voting for members of the general assembly, and shall hold his office two years from the time of his installation, and until his successor is elected and qualified.

LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR; RETURNS OF ELECTIONS. Sec. 3. There shall be a lieutenant-governor, who shall hold his office two years, and be elected at the same time as the governor. In voting for governor and lieutenant-governor, the electors shall designate for whom they vote as governor, and for whom lieutenant-governor. The returns of every election for governor and lieutenant-governor, shall be sealed up and transmitted to the seat of government of the state, directed to the speaker of the house of representatives, who shall open and publish them in the presence of both houses of the general assembly.

ELECTION BY GENERAL ASSEMBLY. Sec. 4. The persons respectively having the highest number of votes for governor and lieutenant-governor shall be declared duly elected; but in case two or more persons shall have an equal, and the highest, number of votes for either office, the general assembly shall, by joint vote, forthwith proceed to elect one of said persons governor, or lieutenant governor, as the case may be.

CONTESTED ELECTIONS. Sec. 5. Contested elections for governor or lieutenant-governor shall be determined by the general assembly in such manner as may be prescribed by law.

ELIGIBILITY. Sec. 6. No person shall be eligible to the office of governor or lieutenant-governor who shall not have been a citizen of the United States, and a resident of the state two years next preceding the election, and attained the age of thirty years at the time of said election.

COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF. Sec. 7. The governor shall be commander-in-chief of the militia, the army, and navy of this state.

DUTIES. Sec. 8. He shall transact all executive business with the officers of government, civil and military, and may require information in writing from the officers of the executive department upon any subject relating to the duties of their respective offices.

EXECUTION OF LAWS. Sec. 9. He shall take care that the laws are faithfully executed.

VACANCIES. Sec. 10. When any office shall, from any cause, become vacant, and no mode is provided by the Constitution and laws for filling such vacancy, the governor shall have power to fill such vacancy by granting a commission, which shall expire at the end of the next session of the general assembly or at the next election by the people.

CONVENING ASSEMBLY. Sec. 11. He may, on extraordinary occasions, convene the general assembly by proclamation, and shall state to both houses, when assembled, the purpose for which they shall have been convened.

MESSAGE. Sec. 12. He shall communicate, by message, to the general assembly, at every regular session, the condition of the state, and recommend such matters as he shall deem expedient.

ADJOURNMENT. Sec. 13. In case of disagreement between the two houses with respect to the time of adjournment, the governor shall have the power to adjourn the general assembly to such time as he may think proper; but no such adjournment shall be beyond the time fixed for the regular meeting of the next general assembly.

DISQUALIFICATION. Sec. 14. No person shall, while holding any office under the authority of the United States, or this state, execute the office of governor, or lieutenant-governor, except as hereinafter expressly provided.

TERM; COMPENSATION OF LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR. Sec. 15. The official term of governor and lieutenant-governor shall commence on the second Monday of January next after their election and continue for two years, and until their successors are elected and qualified. The lieutenant-governor, while acting as governor, shall receive the same pay as provided for governor; and while presiding in the senate shall receive as compensation therefor the same mileage and double the per diem pay provided for a senator, and none other.

PARDONS. Sec. 16. The governor shall have power to grant reprieves, commutations, and pardons, after conviction, for all offenses except treason and cases of impeachment, subject to such regulations as may be provided by law. Upon conviction for treason he shall have power to suspend the execution of the sentence until the case shall be reported to the general assembly at its next meeting, when the general assembly shall either grant a pardon, commute the sentence, direct the execution of the sentence, or grant a further reprieve. He shall have power to remit fines and forfeitures, under such regulations as may be prescribed by law; and shall report to the general assembly, at its next meeting, each case of reprieve, commutation, or pardon granted, and the reasons therefore, and also all persons in whose favor remission of fines and forfeitures shall have been made, and the several amounts required.

LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR TO ACT AS GOVERNOR. Sec. 17. In case of the death, impeachment, resignation, removal from office, or other disability of the governor, the powers and duties of the office for the residue of the term, or until he shall be acquitted, or the disability removed, shall devolve upon the lieutenant-governor.

PRESIDENT OF SENATE. Sec. 18. The lieutenant-governor shall be president of the senate, but shall only vote when the senate is equally divided; and in case of his absence, or impeachment, or when he shall exercise the office of governor, the senate shall choose a president pro tempore.

VACANCIES. Sec. 19. If the lieutenant-governor, while acting as governor, shall be impeached, displaced, resign, or die, or otherwise become incapable of performing the duties of the office, the president pro tempore of the senate shall act as governor until the vacancy is filled or the disability removed; and if the president of the senate, for any of the above causes, shall be rendered incapable of performing the duties pertaining to the office of governor, the same shall devolve upon the speaker of the house of representatives.

SEAL OF STATE. Sec. 20. There shall be a seal of this state, which shall be kept by the governor, and used by him officially, and shall be called the Great Seal of the State of Iowa.

GRANTS AND COMMISSIONS. Sec. 21. All grants and commissions shall be in the name and by the authority of the people of the state of Iowa, sealed with the great seal of the state, signed by the governor, and countersigned by the secretary of state.

SECRETARY, AUDITOR, AND TREASURER. Sec. 22. A secretary of state, auditor of state, and treasurer of state shall be elected by the qualified electors, who shall continue in office two years, and until their successors are elected and qualified, and perform such duties as may be required by law.

The Governor. The governor, lieutenant-governor and all other elective state officers are chosen at the general election held in November in even numbered years. The election returns for governor and for lieutenant-governor are transmitted to the speaker of the house of representatives, who in the presence of both houses of the general assembly, opens the returns and announces the result. As the general assembly is not generally in session at election time, the returns for governor and lieutenant-governor are sent to the executive council and retained by the secretary of state, until the assembly meets and elects a speaker. The governor must take the oath of office administered by a justice of the supreme court within ten days after having been declared elected by the general assembly. He then holds his office until his successor is elected and qualified.

Law of Succession. The Constitution of Iowa provides that the order of succession to the office of governor in case of death, resignation or inability to serve, shall be as follows; the governor; the lieutenant-governor; the president pro tem of the senate; the speaker of the House. Therefore in theory the office of the chief executive of the state is never vacant as each succeeds in his turn. If the governor resigns he sends his resignation to the general assembly, if that body is in session; if not, he deposits it with the secretary of state.

Duties and Powers of the Governor. The duties and powers of the governor are determined both by the Constitution and by the legislature. He is entrusted with the faithful execution of the laws; he advises the general assembly of the condition of the state and recommends needed legislation; he approves or vetoes acts of the legislature; he appoints all officers or members of official boards not otherwise provided for, or so designated by the legislature; his power to appoint generally carries with it the power to remove for cause; he keeps the Great Seal of the state and signs all commissions and seals them with the Seal after being countersigned by the secretary of state; he is commander-in-chief of the state militia; he may make and publish regulations and orders for the government, discipline, and uniforming of the Iowa National Guard; he may convene, adjourn and dissolve the general assembly; he may issue writs for the election of senators and representatives of the state, and for representatives of the United States, in case of vacancies in those offices; he may grant reprieves, commutations and pardons after conviction for all offenses except in cases of treason and impeachment; he may issue requisition papers on the governors of other states, requesting the arrest and return of escaping criminals.

Compensation of Governor. The governor receives a yearly salary of $5000 per year. He also receives $1200 per year for house rent, and he receives $1200 per year for his services as a member of the executive council. The salary of the governor is not fixed by the Constitution, but is left to be determined by the state legislature.

The Secretary of State. This officer is at the head of the department of state and has an office at the capitol at Des Moines. He keeps a careful record of all the acts and resolutions of the territorial legislature and of the general assembly of the state. It is his duty to see that the acts of the general assembly are published and distributed each biennial period. He countersigns all commissions and proclamations issued by the governor and keeps a record of the same. He also keeps the original laws of the state and the original copy of the constitution. Certificates for the nomination of state officers are filed in his office. He also keeps a record of the organization of towns and cities of the state and the population of each.

He has records showing the lands owned by the state. He compiles and distributes the Official Register of Iowa, and gives out other public documents provided for distribution. His term of office is two years and his salary is $2200 annually as secretary and $1200 additional as a member of the executive council.

The State Treasurer. The treasurer of the state receives the revenues of the state and distributes them according to laws passed by the legislature. Whenever money is received by the treasurer a duplicate receipt is given to the auditor and the books of the two offices must always correspond as regards the amount received and paid out. The treasurer pays out money only as he receives a warrant signed by the auditor. The auditor in turn can only issue warrants in accordance with law. With the advice and approval of the executive council the treasurer may select one or more banks in the city of Des Moines in which he may deposit drafts, checks and certificates for collection. If money remains in such banks for any length of time the bank must pay such rate of interest as may be approved of by the executive council. The state treasurer often has the care of as much as six million dollars during a biennial period. His bond is the highest required of any state official. His salary as treasurer is $2200, with $1200 as a member of the executive council.

The Auditor of State. The work of the auditor is to keep an account of all revenues, funds, and incomes of the state, and of all disbursements. His work for the state corresponds to the work of the county auditor for the county. He is a business manager, or secretary of the business affairs of the state. He examines all accounts against the state and if accepted he draws warrants on the state treasurer for their payment. He can draw no warrant except in strict accordance with law. Every dollar paid out of the treasury must be in pursuance of some statute. He must submit a biennial report to the governor of all revenues, funds, income, taxable property, and other resources of the state. The permanent school fund of the state is kept on interest under the management of the state and county auditors. If any county auditor fails to loan out the full amount of his apportionment, he returns it to the state auditor, who sends it to another county. The state auditor also apportions the interest on the school fund to the several counties as directed by law. He also has general supervision over insurance, banking, municipal accounting, loan and trust companies, and building and loan associations. He receives $2200 per year with $1200 extra for his services as member of the executive council.

The Executive Council. The executive council of the state is composed of the governor, secretary, auditor and treasurer, or any three of them. This council is not an advisory body to the governor, but is rather an executive body to which the legislature has delegated certain powers. The chief duties of the council are the equalization of assessments, the canvassing of election returns, the superintendence of the census, the care of state property when no other provision is made, and the providing for the necessary running expenses of officers or departments, from a fund left for that purpose, when the laws do not otherwise provide. This often enables emergencies arising in the administration of affairs to be met without an extra session of the legislature. Many new duties have recently been given to the council, including the appointment and removal of many minor state officials. It appoints the Board of examiners for state mine inspectors. It may remove from office for causes defined by statute the following officers: curator of the state historical society; members of the Board of educational examiners; director of weather and crop service; fish and game warden; the commissioners of pharmacy; Board of dental examiners; members of the Board of parole; dairy commissioners; custodians of public buildings; state veterinary surgeon; oil inspectors; commissioners of animal health; inspectors of boats; Board of optometry examiners; members of the library commission. The salaries of members are fixed at $1200 per year.

The Attorney-General. The chief duties of the attorney-general are to furnish legal advice to all state officers when requesting such advice, and to prosecute all cases in civil and criminal actions in which the state may be a party. As all criminal offenses are crimes against the state he must take charge of such cases when appealed from the lower courts to the supreme court of the state. He may begin action in the district courts when enforcing laws for the removal of county or city officers. In all civil cases in which the state is a party he must represent the state. Members of the general assembly as well as state officers may ask his legal opinion on matters pertaining to legislation. He serves for two years and receives a salary of $4000 per year.

Superintendent of Public Instruction. The duties of the state superintendent have been slightly diminished by recent laws creating the State Board of Education and the Board of examiners. He has general supervision over county superintendents and the common schools of the state. He may call meetings of county superintendents for the more uniform and efficient administration of school law, but he has no authority to compel attendance. When called upon he may determine the time of holding county institutes for teachers and assist in their management and instruction. As a member of the Board of educational examiners he may pass upon the qualifications of teachers.

He has the collection and publication of a large amount of statistics and other information about the public schools. He receives an annual salary of $2200.

THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT

Railroad Commissioners. This Board consists of three members who are elected by the people and serve for four years and receive a salary of $2200 each, per year, and necessary traveling expenses. They have general supervision over all railroads and express companies within the state. It is their duty to enforce laws governing the hauling of freight, that short hauls must be at same rate per mile as long hauls; to prevent pooling; to require the schedule of prices and rates to be posted in a conspicuous place in every station and to enforce passenger rates determined by the legislature. They may also require railroads to furnish such equipment as are provided by law for the protection of public health and safety.

The Board may with the approval of the Senate, appoint a commerce counsel from among the attorneys of the state, whose duty it is to prosecute cases of violation of law by the railroads. He holds office for four years and receives $5000 annually.

The Board of Control. The Board of control was created by an act of the legislature of 1898. This Board has control over all charitable, reformatory, and penal institutions of the state. The Board consists of three members appointed by the governor and confirmed by the Senate. The tenure of office is six years and one member goes out of office every two years. The member whose term first expires is chairman for the last two years of his term. Each member receives an annual salary of $3000 and traveling expenses.

This Board has full and entire control of all institutions placed under its charge, subject only to the will of the legislature. They employ superintendents and other officers and determine their duties. They regulate the discipline within the institutions and determine the rules governing the conduct of inmates except as the legislature may direct by statute. The chief object of the Board's creation was to establish uniformity in the control of the different institutions and to reduce expenses to the state by purchasing supplies in large quantities and at wholesale rates. At present the Board controls the following institutions:

The State Sanatorium for Tuberculosis at Oakdale (near Iowa City).

The School for the Deaf at Council Bluffs.

The Iowa Soldiers' Home at Marshalltown.

The Iowa Soldiers' Orphans' Home at Davenport.

The Institution for Feeble-Minded Children at Glenwood.

The Industrial School for Boys at Eldora.

The Industrial School for Girls at Mitchellville.

The State Hospital for Inebriates at Knoxville.

The State Hospital for Female Inebriates at Mt. Pleasant.

The State Hospital for the Insane at Mt. Pleasant.

The State Hospital for the Insane at Independence.

The State Hospital for the Insane at Clarinda.

The State Hospital for the Insane at Cherokee.

The Penitentiary at Fort Madison.

The Reformatory at Anamosa.

The Industrial Reformatory for Females at Anamosa.

The State Board of Education. The legislature of 1909 passed an act creating this Board. The demand for greater uniformity in the administration of higher education in the state had much to do with the passage of this act. The Board consists of nine members appointed by the governor and confirmed by a two-thirds vote of the Senate, and removable from office by the governor with the consent of the Senate. They serve for a term of six years and one-third are appointed to office every two years. Not more than five members may belong to any one political party and not more than one alumnus from either institution may belong to the Board at one time.

The Board has complete control over the educational institutions of the state, including the State University at Iowa City, the State College of Agriculture at Ames, the State Teachers College at Cedar Falls, and the College for the Blind at Vinton. Subject to the will of the legislature the Board controls these institutions in the minutest details. The Board fills all positions, administrative, academic and clerical; fixes compensations; makes rules and regulations for their government, and controls the property belonging to them. Much of the real control of each institution is given by the Board to the administrative head and to the faculty.

The Board is assisted in financial affairs and in the details of the work by a finance committee of three members, chosen by the Board from outside their own numbers. The members of the committee devote their entire time to the work assigned to them by the Board and receive a yearly salary of $3500 and traveling expenses. The members of the Board are paid $7 per day for the actual number of days spent in service, not to exceed sixty days per year.

The Board of Educational Examiners. This Board consists of five members, three of whom are ex officio members by virtue of being the Superintendent of Public Instruction, the President of the State University, and the President of the State Teachers College. The other two, one of whom must be a woman, are appointed by the governor for a period of four years. The duties of the Board are: to inspect and approve of institutions desiring official recognition for the preparation of teachers; to hold examinations for state diplomas and state certificates; to issue state diplomas and state certificates and uniform county certificates. The ex officio members receive only actual expenses, while the two appointed members receive $3 per day and necessary expenses.

Board of Parole. The Board consists of three members appointed by the governor and confirmed by the Senate. The term of office is six years, one member being appointed every two years. It is the duty of the Board of parole to make rules and regulations governing the paroling of prisoners sentenced to the penitentiaries for less than life sentences. The Board itself has no power to pardon or parole as that power is given by the Constitution to the governor, but the duty of the Board is to assist the governor in investigating applications. After such investigation has been made, the Board may recommend such application to the governor, who may then at his discretion exercise his power of pardon or of parole. The Board holds at least four sessions each year and each member receives $10 per day as compensation.

Board of Health. The attorney-general and the state veterinary surgeon are members ex officio of the Board, together with a civil engineer and seven physicians, who are appointed by the governor and approved by the executive council. The term of service is seven years and no compensation, except necessary traveling expenses, is paid. The Board may hire a secretary, who may receive as much as $3000 per year as compensation. The duties of the Board relate almost entirely to the preservation of the public health. They are frequently called to investigate contagious diseases and determine their causes, and to examine the water supply of towns and cities. They may license undertakers and dispose of unclaimed bodies.

CHAPTER XVII.

THE CONSTITUTION OF IOWA

JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT

The judiciary may be defined as the law interpreting department of the government. The legislative department makes the laws for the state and local governments, and the executive department carries these laws into effect. If the legislature in making a law, exceeds its authority, or if the officers of the executive department refuse to perform their duties, government is a failure unless some remedy is provided. It is the duty of the judiciary to test the constitutionality of laws and determine whether the legislature has exceeded its powers and whether the law enacted is just. It is furthermore the duty of the judiciary to bring a delinquent officer before the court and compel him to do his duty, or punish him for refusing. Thus one duty of the court is to act as a compelling force over the executive, and another duty is to guard the rights of the people by checking the legislature.

The real function of the courts is to interpret law. This does not always seem clear. In the above instance, when the court compels an executive officer to do his duty it would seem that the court itself were exercising executive power. This is not true. The laws of the state clearly provide the duties and powers of executive officers, and the court is only interpreting law when it compels the officer to perform his legal duties. The most important work of the court is to determine conflicts arising between individuals in their ordinary business transactions. Sometimes laws are not well written and give occasion to various interpretations. Sometimes one individual will attempt to evade a law, or to misapply it to the injury of another. Sometimes a law is well understood, but not willingly observed. In these instances the aggrieved party may seek relief in the courts. When an offense is so serious as to be called a crime, the state is the aggrieved party and the action is brought in the name of the state. The question as to the facts is determined by a jury which hears the evidence. The court then declares the law applying to this case and renders a decision accordingly.

ARTICLE V — JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT

COURTS. Section 1. The judicial power shall be vested in a supreme court, district court, and such other courts, inferior to the supreme court, as the general assembly may, from time to time, establish.

SUPREME COURT. Sec. 2. The supreme court shall consist of three judges, two of whom shall constitute a quorum to hold court.

JUDGES ELECTED. Sec. 3. The judges of the supreme court shall be elected by the qualified electors of the state, and shall hold their court at such time and place as the general assembly may prescribe. The judges of the supreme court so elected shall be classified so that one judge shall go out of office every two years; and the judge holding the shortest term of office under such classification shall be chief justice of the court during his term, and so on in rotation. After the expiration of their terms of office, under such classification, the term of each judge of the supreme court shall be six years, and until his successor shall have been elected and qualified. The judges of the supreme court shall be ineligible to any other office in the state during the term for which they shall have been elected.

JURISDICTION. Sec. 4. The supreme court shall have appellate jurisdiction only in cases in chancery, and shall constitute a court for the correction of errors at law, under such restrictions as the general assembly may by law prescribe; and shall have power to issue all writs and process necessary to secure justice to parties, and exercise a supervisory control over all inferior judicial tribunals throughout the state.

DISTRICT COURT AND JUDGE. Sec. 5. The district court shall consist of a single judge, who shall be elected by the qualified electors of the district in which he resides. The judge of the district court shall hold his office for the term of four years; and until his successor shall have been elected and qualified; and shall be ineligible to any other office, except that of judge of the supreme court, during the term for which he was elected.

JURISDICTION. Sec. 6. The district court shall be a court of law and equity, which shall be distinct and separate jurisdictions, and have jurisdiction in civil and criminal matters arising in their respective districts, in such manner as shall be prescribed by law.

CONSERVATORS OF THE PEACE. Sec. 7. The judges of the supreme and district courts shall be conservators of the peace throughout the state.

STYLE OF PROCESS. Sec. 8. The style of all process shall be "The State of Iowa," and all prosecutions shall be conducted in the name and by the authority of the same.

SALARIES. Sec. 9. The salary of each judge of the supreme court shall be $2000 per annum, and that of each district judge $1600 per annum, until the year eighteen hundred and sixty, after which time they shall severally receive such compensation as the general assembly may, by law, prescribe, which compensation shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which they shall have been elected.*

The present salary of each judge of the supreme court is $6000, and that of the district judges, $3500.

* See amendment and comment following Section 10.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS. Sec. 10. The state shall be divided into eleven judicial districts; and after the year eighteen hundred and sixty the general assembly may reorganize the judicial districts and increase or diminish the number of districts, or the number of judges of the said court, and may increase the number of judges of the supreme court; but such increase or diminution shall not be more than one district, or one judge of either court, at any one session; and no reorganization of the districts or diminution of the judges shall have the effect of removing a judge from office. Such reorganization of the districts, or any change in the boundaries thereof, or any increase or diminution of the number of judges, shall take place every four years thereafter, if necessary, and at no other time.

(AMENDMENT.) At any regular session of the general assembly, the state may be divided into the necessary judicial districts for district-court purposes, or the said districts may be reorganized and the number of the districts and the judges of said courts increased or diminished; but no reorganization of the districts or diminution of the judges shall have the effect of removing a judge from office.*

The number of judicial districts in the state is now twenty, and the number of judges in each district varies from one to five.

WHEN CHOSEN. Sec. 11. The judges of the supreme and district courts shall be chosen at the general election; and the term of office of each judge shall commence on the first day of January next after his election.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL. Sec. 12. The general assembly shall provide, by law, for the election of an attorney-general by the people, whose term of office shall be two years, and until his successor shall have been elected and qualified.

COUNTY ATTORNEY. Sec. 13. The qualified electors of each county shall, at the general election in the year eighteen hundred and eighty-six, and every two years thereafter, elect a county attorney, who shall be a resident of the county for which he is elected, and shall hold his office for two years, and until his successor shall have been elected and qualified.

* The foregoing was submitted to the electors at the general election in 1884, as a proposed amendment to the Constitution, and was by them adopted.

CARRYING INTO EFFECT. Sec. 14. It shall be the duty of the general assembly to provide for the carrying into effect of this article, and to provide for a general system of practice in all the courts of this state.

THE GRAND JURY. Sec. 15. The grand jury may consist of any number of members not less than five, nor more than fifteen, as the general assembly may by law provide, or the general assembly may provide for holding persons to answer for any criminal offense without the intervention of the grand jury.

The judicial system of Iowa now comprises a supreme court, district courts, superior courts, justices' courts, and municipal courts. The source of authority for the first four courts is the Constitution. The municipal courts are provided for by acts of the legislature. It will be observed that the courts are arranged in a graded series from lower to higher, so that minor and less important cases may be settled in the lower courts, while the higher tribunals are allowed more time for the trial and settlement of more important cases.

The Supreme Court. The legislature has the power to increase the number of judges in the supreme court. There are now six judges who serve for a term of six years and receive a yearly compensation of $6000. Two judges are elected every two years by the people at the general election. The older of the two judges having the shortest term yet to serve, is chief justice during the first year and his colleague during the second year. The court holds three regular terms each year, beginning in January, May and September.

The jurisdiction of the supreme court is almost entirely appellate — that is, it hears cases having begun in a lower court and having been taken by appeal up to the supreme court. It has original jurisdiction in only two instances — in mandamus and certiorari cases. It exercises a supervisory jurisdiction over all inferior courts of the state, and has as its chief function the correction of errors at law committed in the decisions of lower courts. The cases appealed to the supreme court are not retried, except equity cases, but are reviewed as to matters of law, to determine if the lower court committed any error in the application or in the interpretation of the law. The decisions of the supreme court are final, except in a very few instances, which may be carried to the supreme court of the United States. If the judges are equally divided in their opinion, the judgment of the lower court is always sustained.

The clerk of the supreme court and the reporter are elected by the people and hold office for four years. The clerk keeps a complete record of the proceedings of the court, files all printed matter and papers in the cases, issues orders to carry out the directions of the court, files and enters the opinions of the court and delivers them to the reporter for publication. The reporter prepares from the opinions of the court the printed digests known as the "Supreme Court Reports."

Decisions. The decisions of the supreme court are considered as the interpretation of law within the state. All lower courts in the state follow, as nearly as possible, the decisions of the supreme court. If they were to do otherwise their decisions could be appealed from and the case carried to the supreme court, where it would be reversed.

District Courts. There are now twenty judicial districts in Iowa, having from one to five judges in each district. The establishment of such districts is within the power of the legislature, which may increase or diminish either the number of districts or the number of judges. District judges are elected by the people for a term of four years and receive a compensation of $3500 per year. The district court holds four sessions each year in each county. Its jurisdiction extends to the trial of all offenses and crimes committed against the laws of the state. It will be remembered, however, that certain minor offenses may, with the consent of both parties, be tried in a justice's court.

Superior Courts. A superior court may be established in any city having a population of 4000 or more, if a majority of the people favor such court. Its name, doubtless, arose out of the fact that when such court is created, it not only displaces the police or mayor's court and takes exclusive jurisdiction of all cases arising under the city ordinances, but it is superior to such courts in that it has concurrent jurisdiction with the district court in all civil matters, except in probate cases, actions for divorce, alimony, and separate maintenance. This court also has concurrent jurisdiction with the justice of the peace, and cases may be appealed to this court from the justices in the township. If both parties consent, cases may be appealed from any justice of the peace in the county. This so-called superior court is inferior to the district court in that criminal cases may be appealed from this court to the district court.

The judge of the superior court is elected by the voters of the city, holds his office for a term of four years, and receives a yearly compensation of $2000. One-half of the yearly salary is paid by the city and the other half by the county. In cities having a population of 25,000 or more the salary is $3000. Such court offers advantages to cities somewhat distant from the county seat. In 1912, there were seven cities in Iowa having superior courts, as follows: Cedar Rapids, Council Bluffs, Grinnell, Keokuk, Oelwein, Perry, Shenandoah.

Justices' Courts. The justices of the peace are elected by the people in the townships for a period of two years and are paid by fees. They have power to try petty cases in both civil and criminal matters. They have jurisdiction over criminal cases involving not more than thirty days' imprisonment, or a fine of one hundred dollars, and over civil cases, where the value in controversy does not exceed one hundred dollars, or with the consent of both parties the amount may be three hundred dollars. No record of the proceedings is kept other than the names of the cases tried. A justice's court may have a jury of six men.

Prosecuting Attorneys. The judicial machinery of the state would be of very little value in the actual administration of government were it not for the services rendered by the county attorneys and the attorney-general. Each county has a county attorney whose duty it is to prosecute all cases arising in his county, in which the state is a party, when brought in either the justice's court in the township or in the district court in the county. When a case is appealed from the district court of the county to the supreme court of the state, the attorney-general takes charge of the case. He may retain the county attorney to assist him if he cares to do so. In all cases affecting state officers directly the attorney general assumes charge of the case immediately. He may begin action in a district when enforcing laws for the removal of county or city officers.

CHAPTER XVIII.

THE SELECTION OF JURIES

Who May Act. "All qualified electors of the state, of good moral character, sound judgment, and in full possession of the senses of hearing and seeing, and who can speak, write and read the English language, are competent jurors in their respective counties."

Who are Exempt. All persons holding office under the laws of the United States or this state; all practicing attorneys, physicians, dentists, registered pharmacists, and clergymen; all acting professors or teachers of any college, school or other institution of learning; and all persons disabled by bodily infirmity, or over sixty-five years of age; active members of any fire company; and any person who is conscientiously opposed to acting as a juror because of his religious faith.

Who May be Excused. Any person may also be excused from serving on a jury when his own interests and those of the public will be materially injured by his attendance, or when the state of his own health, or the death or sickness of a member of his own family, requires his absence from court. Any person who knowingly makes false affidavit, statement, or claim for the purpose of escaping jury service may be fined not exceeding one hundred dollars, or by imprisonment in the county jail, not exceeding thirty days.

Grand Jury Defined. A grand or presentment jury is a body of men called to investigate complaints of criminal offenses, and if cause be found, to draw up a true bill against the accused. This bill is called an indictment. In the United States the number constituting a grand jury is a matter of local regulation, and is frequently determined by the state Constitution or by the legislature. Iowa has provided that seven men may constitute a grand jury.

Petit Jury Defined. A petit, or trial jury, is a body of twelve men, selected according to law, impaneled and sworn to inquire into and try any matter of fact, and to render their true verdict according to the evidence legally adduced. Trial by jury is guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States in all civil cases except upon impeachments, and in all suits in common law where the subject matter of the controversy exceeds twenty dollars in value. This refers only to trials in the Federal courts, and places no restriction whatever upon state courts. States may in their own Constitutions dispense with trial by jury both in civil and criminal cases. When the Constitution of a state preserves the right of trial by jury inviolate, the legislature cannot change the number of jurors in either civil or criminal cases.

Process of Selection. (1) On or before the first Monday in September in each year, the county auditor shall apportion the number of grand and petit jurors to be selected among the several election precincts, and the talesmen among the precincts from which the same are to be drawn, in each case as nearly as practicable in proportion to the number of votes polled in such precincts at the last general election. (2) The auditor furnishes to the judges a statement of the number of persons apportioned to their respective precincts to be returned for each of the jury lists. This statement is sent out with the pooling books just before the election. (3) The judges of election make the selection of names and return the lists of names so selected to the auditor along with the election returns. Such lists are composed only of persons competent and qualified to serve as jurors. (4) On or before the first Monday in December each year, the county auditor and clerk of the district court shall prepare from these lists separate ballots, containing names of all persons so returned. These different classes of names are kept separate and are deposited in separate boxes for the grand jurors, the petit jurors, and the talesmen, and are plainly marked and sealed and deposited with the clerk of the district. For the grand jury list 75 names are selected from the whole county court. For the petit jury, 400 names are selected in counties of 20,000 population or less, and 800 in counties over 20,000 population. For the talesmen, 150 names are selected in counties having 20,000 population or less, and 300 names in counties having more than 20,000 people. (5) At least twenty days prior to first day of each term of court, the clerk, auditor and recorder draw twelve names from the box containing the grand jury list, which names shall constitute a panel from which to select grand jurors for one year. Not more than one person shall be grand juror from any township except there be less than twelve civil townships in the county. From the box containing names for the petit jury, the clerk, auditor and recorder shall draw fifteen names in counties of 15,000 people or less, and twenty-four in counties of over 15,000 people. (6) On the second day of each term of court the clerk places in a box the twelve names constituting the grand jury panel and draws from it seven names, which persons shall constitute the grand jury for that term. If the panel for the petit jury is exhausted, either through excuses granted or through challenges made when selecting a jury for a particular case, the panel shall be again increased by the clerk, auditor and recorder again drawing names from the box containing the petit jury list. (7) If when trying a case, the petit jury list is exhausted or the panel is exhausted and those on the list cannot be reached, the clerk shall in the presence of the court, draw such number of names as the court may order from the talesmen box to complete the jury.

Challenges. Either party to a suit may challenge the whole panel of the petit jurors, or any individual juror. If the challenge is made to the panel, it must be in writing, specifying the grounds of the objection. If this objection is sustained by the court another panel is drawn. A challenge to an individual juror is either peremptory or for cause. A peremptory challenge is an objection to a juror for which no reason need be given. Each party to a suit has the right to make five peremptory challenges. Any number of jurors may be challenged for cause. The cause must be such as will be recognized by the judge.

Fees of Jurors. Each juror shall receive two dollars for each day's service or attendance in the district court, and for each mile traveled from his residence to the place of trial, the sum of ten cents.

CHAPTER XIX.

THE CONSTITUTION OF IOWA

ARTICLE VI — MILITIA

WHO CONSTITUTE. Section 1. The militia of this state shall be composed of all able-bodied male citizens between the ages of eighteen and forty-five years, except such as are or may hereafter be exempt by the laws of the United States, or of this state; and shall be armed, equipped, and trained, as the general assembly may provide by law.

EXEMPTION. Sec. 2. No person or persons conscientiously scrupulous of bearing arms shall be compelled to do military duty in time of peace; provided, that such person or persons shall pay an equivalent for such exemption in the same manner as other citizens.

OFFICERS. Sec. 3. All commissioned officers of the militia (staff officers excepted) shall be elected by the persons liable to perform military duty and shall be commissioned by the governor.

The Militia. Militia is a general term referring to all able-bodied male citizens, between the ages of eighteen and forty-five years, not otherwise exempt from military duty. The assessor reports the names of persons eligible for military service to the county auditor, who in turn sends the corrected lists to the adjutant-general. "The Iowa National Guard" is the active militia of the state. It is made up of volunteer enlistments, and consists of four regiments of infantry, and at the discretion of the commander-in-chief, of two batteries of artillery and two troops of cavalry, with the necessary staff department.

In case of breach of the peace, or tumult, or riot, the sheriff of any county may call for aid from any commanding officer of any military company within his county. The sheriff must immediately notify the governor of such action. If greater force is needed to preserve order, the sheriff calls on the governor for more companies of troops. When the President of the United States makes a requisition for troops, the governor as commander-in-chief must order into service the National Guard of the state, or such portion of it as may be necessary. If this force is not sufficient, the governor calls for as much of the militia as is necessary to make up the required number. The militia is first chosen from volunteers, but if a sufficient number do not volunteer, the remainder are designated by means of draft.

ARTICLE VII — STATE DEBTS

CREDIT NOT TO BE LOANED. Section 1. The credit of the state shall not, in any manner, be given or loaned to, or in aid of, any individual, association, or corporation; and the state shall never assume, or become responsible for, the debts or liabilities of any individual, association, or corporation, unless incurred in time of war for the benefit of the state.

LIMITATION. Sec. 2. The state may contract debts to supply casual deficits or failures in revenues, or to meet expenses not otherwise provided for; but the aggregate amount of such debts, direct and contingent, whether contracted by virtue of one or more acts of the general assembly, or at different periods of time, shall never exceed the sum of $250,000; and the money arising from the creation of such debts shall be applied to the purpose for which it was obtained, or to repay the debts so contracted, and to no other purpose whatever.

LOSSES TO SCHOOL FUNDS. Sec. 3. All losses to the permanent school or university fund of this state, which shall have been occasioned by the defalcation, mismanagement, or fraud of the agents or officers controlling and managing the same, shall be audited by the proper authorities of the state. The amount so audited shall be a permanent funded debt against the state, in favor of the respective fund sustaining the loss, upon which not less than six per cent annual interest shall be paid. The amount of liability so created shall not be counted as a part of the indebtedness authorized by the second section of this article.

WAR DEBTS. Sec. 4. In addition to the above limited power to contract debts, the state may contract debts to repel invasion, suppress insurrection, or defend the state in war; but the money arising from the debts so contracted shall be applied to the purpose for which it was raised, or to repay such debts, and to no other purpose whatever.

QUESTION OF INCURRING DEBT SUBMITTED. Sec. 5. Except the debts hereinbefore specified in this article, no debt shall be hereafter contracted by, or on behalf of, this state, unless such debt shall be authorized by some law for some single work or object, to be distinctly specified therein; and such law shall impose and provide for the collection of a direct annual tax sufficient to pay the interest on such debt as it falls due, and also to pay and discharge the principal of such debt within twenty years from the time of the contracting thereof; but no such law shall take effect until at a general election it shall have been submitted to the people, and have received a majority of all the votes cast for and against it at such election; and all money raised by authority of such law, shall be applied only to the specific object therein stated, or to the payment of the debt created thereby; and such law shall be published in at least one newspaper in each county, if one is published therein, throughout the state, for three months preceding the election at which it is submitted to the people.

LEGISLATURE MAY REPEAL. Sec. 6. The legislature may, at any time, after the approval of such law by the people, if no debt shall have been contracted in pursuance thereof, repeal the same; and may at any time forbid the contracting of any further debt, or liability, under such law; but the tax imposed by such law, in proportion to the debt or liability which may have been contracted in pursuance thereof, shall remain in force and be irrevocable, and be annually collected, until the principal and interest are fully paid.

TAX IMPOSED DISTINCTLY STATED. Sec. 7. Every law which imposes, continues, or revives a tax, shall distinctly state the tax, and the object to which it is to be applied; and it shall not be sufficient to refer to any other law to fix such tax or object.

The Constitution carefully guards the credit of the state and prevents the loss of money through unwise business transactions of the legislature. Section 1 prevents any corporation or association having great political influence from using the state as a tool or agent for the purpose of securing money. Provision is, however, made in Section 2, whereby the legislature may meet emergencies and may contract debts to the extent of $250,000. If a loss occurs in the permanent school fund of the state the Constitution provides that such loss may be made good by the state paying into the annual income from the school fund, such sum as would equal the interest on the amount lost. In time of war or invasion the state may contract debts in excess of the amount allowed during peace, but the money raised for such purpose cannot be expended for any other.

ARTICLE VIII — CORPORATIONS

HOW CREATED. Section 1. No corporation shall be created by special laws; but the general assembly shall provide by general laws, for the organization of all corporations hereafter to be created, except as hereinafter provided.

PROPERTY TAXABLE. Sec. 2. The property of all corporations for pecuniary profit shall be subject to taxation the same as that of individuals.

STATE NOT TO BE A STOCKHOLDER. Sec. 3. The state shall not become a stockholder in any corporation, nor shall it assume or pay the debt or liability of any corporation, unless incurred in time of war for the benefit of the state.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION. Sec. 4. No political or municipal corporation shall become a stockholder in any banking corporation, directly or indirectly.

ACT CREATING BANKING ASSOCIATIONS. Sec. 5. No act of the general assembly, authorizing or creating corporations of associations with banking powers, nor amendments thereto, shall take effect, or in any manner be in force, until the same shall have been submitted, separately, to the people, at a general or special election, as provided by law, to be held not less than three months after the passage of the act, and shall have been approved by a majority of all the electors voting for and against it at such election.

STATE BANK. Sec. 6. Subject to the provisions of the foregoing Section, the general assembly may also provide for the establishment of a state bank with branches.

SPECIE BASIS. Sec. 7. If a state bank be established, it shall be founded on an actual specie basis, and the branches shall be mutually responsible for each other's liabilities upon all notes, bills and other issues intended for circulation as money.

GENERAL BANKING LAW. Sec. 8. If a general banking law should be enacted, it shall provide for the registry and countersigning, by an officer of state, of all bills, or paper credit designed to circulate as money, and require security to the full amount thereof, to be deposited with the state treasurer, in United States stocks, or in interest-paying stocks of states in good credit and standing, to be rated at ten per cent below their average value in the city of New York, for the thirty days next preceding their deposit; and in case of a depreciation of any portion of such stocks, to the amount of ten per cent on the dollar, the bank or banks owning said stock shall be required to make up said deficiency by depositing additional stocks; and said law shall also provide for the recording of the names of all stockholders in such corporations, the amount of stock held by each, the time of any transfer, and to whom.

STOCKHOLDERS RESPONSIBLE. Sec. 9. Every stockholder in a banking corporation or institution shall be individually responsible and liable to its creditors, over and above the amount of stock by him or her held, to an amount equal to his or her respective shares so held, for all its liabilities accruing while he or she remains such stockholder.

BILL-HOLDERS PREFERRED. Sec. 10. In case of the insolvency of any banking institution, the bill-holders shall have a preference over its other creditors.

SUSPENSION OF SPECIE PAYMENTS. Sec. 11. The suspension of specie payments by banking institutions shall never be permitted or sanctioned.

AMENDMENT OR REPEAL OF CHARTERS; EXCLUSIVE PRIVILEGES. Sec. 12. Subject to the provisions of this article, the general assembly shall have power to amend or repeal all laws for the organization or creation of corporations, or granting of special or exclusive privileges or immunities, by a vote of two-thirds of each branch of the general assembly; and no exclusive privileges, except as in this article provided, shall ever be granted.

The legislature enacts general laws governing corporations. Among the powers given to corporations are the following: to have perpetual succession; to sue and be sued by its corporate name; to have a common seal which it may alter at pleasure; to render the interests of the stockholders transferable; to exempt the private property of its members from liability for corporate debts, except as otherwise declared; to make contracts and to acquire and transfer property as a natural person; to establish by-laws and make rules and regulations for managing their affairs. Before commencing business, every corporation for pecuniary profit must be recorded with the county recorder of the county in which it operates and with the secretary of state at Des Moines.

Section 6 provides for the establishment of state banks. These banks were, by Sections 7 and 8, given power to issue notes to circulate as money. Such power still exists, but is no longer used by state banks. State banks were often not well protected by laws governing their charters, and they became insolvent and the money issued by them became worthless. On March 3, 1865, Congress passed an act laying a ten per cent tax on all state bank notes paid out of any bank. This drove all state bank bills out of circulation. Since that time the issuance of bank notes to circulate as money has been confined to national banks.

Every stockholder in a bank is held liable for double the amount of stock held by him in case of failure of the bank. If a person has shares to the extent of $1000 face value, he is liable to the extent of $2000 if the bank fails.

ARTICLE IX—SCHOOL FUNDS AND SCHOOL LANDS

UNDER CONTROL OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY. Section 1. The educational and school fund and lands shall be under the control and management of the general assembly of this state.

PERMANENT FUND. Sec. 2. The university lands, and the proceeds thereof, and all moneys belonging to said fund, shall be a permanent fund for the sole use of the state university. The interest arising from the same shall be annually appropriated for the support and benefit of said university.

LANDS APPROPRIATED. Sec. 3. The general assembly shall encourage, by all suitable means, the promotion of intellectual, scientific, moral, and agricultural improvement. The proceeds of all lands that have been, or hereafter may be, granted by the United States to this state, for the support of schools, which may have been or shall hereafter be sold, or disposed of, and the five hundred thousand acres of land granted to the new states, under an act of Congress, distributing the proceeds of the public lands among the several states of the Union, approved in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-one, and all estates of deceased persons who may have died without leaving a will or heir, and also such per cent as has been or may hereafter be granted by Congress, on the sale of lands in this state, shall be, and remain a perpetual fund, the interest of which, together with all rents of the unsold lands, and such other means as the general assembly may provide, shall be inviolably appropriated to the support of common schools throughout the state.

FINES, ETC.; HOW APPROPRIATED. Sec. 4. The money which may have been or shall be paid by persons as an equivalent for exemption from military duty; and the clear proceeds of all fines collected in the several counties for any breach of the penal laws, shall be exclusively applied in the several counties in which such money is paid, or fine collected, among the several school districts of said counties, in proportion to the number of youth subject to enumeration in such districts, to the support of common schools, or the establishment of libraries, as the board of education shall from time to time provide.

PROCEEDS OF LANDS. Sec. 5. The general assembly shall take measures for the protection, improvement, or other disposition of such lands as have been or may hereafter be reserved or granted by the United States, or any person or persons, to this state, for the use of the university; and the funds accruing from the rents or sale of such lands, or from any other source for the purpose aforesaid, shall be, and remain a permanent fund, the interest of which shall be applied to the support of said university for the promotion of literature, the arts and sciences, as may be authorized by the terms of such grant. And it shall be the duty of the general assembly, as soon as may be, to provide effectual means for the improvement and permanent security of the funds of said university.

AGENTS OF SCHOOL FUNDS. Sec. 6. The financial agents of the school funds shall be the same that, by law, receive and control the state and county revenue for other civil purposes, under such regulations as may be provided by law.

DISTRIBUTION. Sec. 7. The money subject to the support and maintenance of common schools shall be distributed to the districts in proportion to the number of youths between the ages of five and twenty-one years, in such manner as may be provided by the general assembly.

The chapter of this book entitled, "The Cost of Education," will furnish adequate explanation of the provisions of the Constitution as set forth in Article IX.

ARTICLE X—AMENDMENTS TO THE CONSTITUTION

How PROPOSED; SUBMISSION. Section 1. Any amendment or amendments to this Constitution may be proposed in either house of the general assembly; and if the same shall be agreed to by a majority of the members elected to each of the two houses, such proposed amendment shall be entered on their journals, with the yeas and nays taken thereon, and referred to the legislature to be chosen at the next general election, and shall be published, as provided by law, for three months previous to the time of making such choice; and if, in the general assembly so next chosen as aforesaid, such proposed amendment or amendments shall be agreed to by a majority of all the members elected to each house, then it shall be the duty of the general assembly to submit such proposed amendment or amendments to the people in such manner, and at such time as the general assembly shall provide; and if the people shall approve and ratify such amendment or amendments by a majority of the electors qualified to vote for members of the general assembly, voting thereon, such amendment or amendments shall become a part of the Constitution of this state.

MORE THAN ONE. Sec. 2. If two or more amendments shall be submitted at the same time, they shall be submitted in such manner that the electors shall vote for or against each of such amendments separately.

CONVENTION. Sec. 3. At the general election to be held in the year one thousand eight hundred and seventy, and in each tenth year thereafter, and also at such times as the general assembly may, by law, provide, the question, "Shall there be a convention to revise the Constitution, and amend the same?" shall be decided by the electors qualified to vote for members of the general assembly; and in case a majority of the electors so qualified, voting at such election for and against such proposition, shall decide in favor of a convention for such purpose, the general assembly, at its next session, shall provide by law for the election of delegates to such convention.

ARTICLE XI — MISCELLANEOUS

CIVIL JURISDICTION OF THE JUSTICE OF THE PEACE. Section 1. The jurisdiction of justices of the peace shall extend to all civil cases (except cases in chancery and cases where the question of title to real estate may arise) where the amount in controversy does not exceed one hundred dollars, and by the consent of parties may be extended to any amount not exceeding three hundred dollars.)

COUNTIES. Sec. 2. No new county shall be hereafter created containing less than four hundred and thirty-two square miles; nor shall the territory of any organized county be reduced below that area; except the county of Worth, and the counties west of it, along the northern boundary of this state, may be organized without additional territory.

INDEBTEDNESS OF POLITICAL CORPORATIONS. Sec. 3. No county or other political or municipal corporation shall be allowed to become indebted in any manner or for any purpose to an amount, in the aggregate, exceeding five per cent of the value of the taxable property within such county or corporation — to be ascertained by the last state and county tax lists, previous to the incurring of such indebtedness.

BOUNDARIES. Sec. 4. The boundaries of the state may be enlarged with the consent of Congress and the general assembly.

OATH OF OFFICE. Sec. 5. Every person elected or appointed to any office shall, before entering upon the duties thereof, take an oath or affirmation to support the Constitution of the United States, and of this state, and also an oath of office.

HOW VACANCIES ARE FILLED. Sec. 6. In all cases of elections to fill vacancies in office occurring before the expiration of a full term, the person so elected shall hold for the residue of the unexpired term; and all persons appointed to fill vacancies in office shall hold until the next general election, and until their successors are elected and qualified.

LAND GRANTS LOCATED. Sec. 7. The general assembly shall not locate any of the public lands which have been or may be granted by Congress to this state, and the location of which may be given to the general assembly, upon lands actually settled, without the consent of the occupant. The extent of the claim of such occupant so exempted shall not exceed three hundred and twenty acres.

SEAT OF GOVERNMENT; STATE UNIVERSITY. Sec. 8. The seat of government is hereby permanently established, as now fixed by law, at the city of Des Moines, in the county of Polk; and the state university at Iowa City, in the county of Johnson.

ARTICLE XII — SCHEDULE

Article XII of the Constitution, known as the schedule, contains sixteen sections and was for the most part drawn up at the time of the revision of the Constitution in 1857.

The last chapters have been added since. The schedule is a statement of the provisions necessary to the starting of the government under the new Constitution. The sixteenth Section, adopted in 1904, which deals with the subject of biennial elections is given below:

BIENNIAL ELECTIONS. Sec. 16. The first general election after the adoption of this amendment shall be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November in the year one thousand nine hundred and six, and general elections shall be held biennially thereafter. In the year one thousand nine hundred and six there shall be elected a governor, lieutenant-governor, secretary of state, auditor of state, treasurer of state, attorney-general, two judges of the supreme court, the successors of the judges of the district court whose terms of office expire on December 31, one thousand nine hundred and six, state senators who would otherwise be chosen in the year one thousand nine hundred and five, and members of the house of representatives. The terms of office of the judges of the supreme court which would otherwise expire on December 31, in odd-numbered years, and all other elective state, county and township officers, whose terms of office would otherwise expire in January in the year one thousand nine hundred and six, and members of the general assembly whose successors would otherwise be chosen at the general election in the year one thousand nine hundred and five, are hereby extended one year and until their successors are elected and qualified. The terms of offices of senators whose successors would otherwise be chosen in the year one thousand nine hundred and seven are hereby extended one year and until their successors are elected and qualified. The general assembly shall make such changes in the law governing the time of election and terms of office of all other elective officers as shall be necessary to make the time of their election and terms of office conform to this amendment, and shall provide which of the judges of the supreme court shall serve as chief justice. The general assembly shall meet in regular session on the second Monday in January, in the year one thousand nine hundred and six, and also on the second Monday in January in the year one thousand nine hundred and seven, and biennially thereafter.

[By proper legislative action (29 G. A. joint res. No. 5 and 30 G. A. joint res. No. 1) a proposed amendment, adding the foregoing Section number 16 to Article XII, was submitted to the electors at the general election in 1904, and adopted. Practically the same amendment was adopted by the people, November 6, 1900, but the supreme court February 1, 1901, in the case of the State of Iowa, ex rel Marsh W. Bailey, vs. S. W. Brookhart, respondent, appellant, held that the amendment, Section 16, was not proposed and adopted as required by the Constitution, and did not become a part thereof.]

CHAPTER XX.

POLITICAL PARTIES IN IOWA

A political party in a republican form of government is an organized means whereby the people may give expression to their political opinions and wishes. It is by means of party organization that people control their political institutions. When Iowa was organized as a separate territory in 1838, there were two leading political parties in the country. The Democratic Party was then in power and had been in charge of the government since the beginning of Jackson's administration. The Whig Party, which was the successor of the Adams, Clay and Crawford forces, had assumed the name Whig in 1834, and had as its leaders Clay, Webster and Harrison. Iowa became a territory during the Democratic administration of Van Buren and was given Democratic officers during its first period of territorial organization. Robert Lucas, an Ohio Democrat, was appointed by President Van Buren as the first territorial governor and William B. Conway was chosen secretary. The first territorial legislature was elected in 1838 and contained a large Democratic majority. A Democratic delegate was elected to Congress by a vote of 4492 to 913. In 1841, with the inauguration of Harrison and Tyler, who were of the Whig Party, the territory was given Whig officers, but the legislature remained Democratic. The Liberty and Free Soil Parties never had a large or important following in Iowa.

Early Political Issues. The slave question was an issue in early territorial and state government, although it never reached the point of bitter strife as in the states farther south where slavery was profitable. In 1848, the Whigs declared themselves opposed to the extension of slavery, and in 1856, the Republican Party followed the Whigs in advocating no interference with slavery where it existed, but no further extension of slave territory. The tariff has been an issue between the Republican and Democratic Parties since the beginning of the state government. The strife has never been bitter, because the state is primarily agricultural with but few large manufacturing industries. The Constitution of 1846 was not friendly towards corporations organized for pecuniary profits. They could be organized by the legislature, but acts creating corporations with banking powers had to be referred to the people for their approval. The legislature was also given power, by a two-thirds vote of each branch, to amend or repeal all laws creating corporations, and the state was denied the right to become a stockholder in any corporation. The bank question caused considerable discussion as a National issue between the Democratic and Whig Parties. The state Constitution of 1845 forbade the organization of banks for the issuance of paper money. The Whigs were strongly opposed to this provision. The Constitution of 1846 gave the election of supreme court judges to the legislature. The Whigs were strongly opposed to such manner of choice and were joined by many disaffected Democrats. In the revision of the Constitution of 1857, the election of judges was given to the people.

In 1848, the spirit of railroad building took possession of Iowa. The general assembly asked Congress to grant public lands consisting of alternate sections for a distance of five miles on either side of the proposed roadways. Two roads were projected, one from Davenport via Iowa City to Des Moines, then to Council Bluffs; the other was to extend from Dubuque to Iowa City, then to Keokuk.

The first land grant made by Congress for railroads was in 1856.

The temperance movement throughout Iowa during the early period resulted in the passage of stringent laws regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors. Saloons were declared a nuisance and the manufacture and sale of liquors was forbidden. In 1847, a local option law was voted upon. It provided that counties could grant licenses for the retailing of liquor. This act was defeated by the people, but it did not destroy liquor traffic. Liquor was sold contrary to law. In 1849, a law was passed giving local option to the counties. This resulted in the defeat of liquor selling in the prohibition counties, but not in others. In 1851, an act was passed providing that the people of the state should take no share in the profits of retailing liquor, but that the sale of liquor as merchandise was not prohibited. In 1855, the first prohibitory liquor law was enacted and ratified by a vote of the people. This law, however good in its provisions, was not enforced and liquor continued to be sold. It was followed in 1857 by a license law which was declared to be unconstitutional by the supreme court in the same year. In 1858, the law was so amended as to legalize the sale of ale, wine and beer, and to some extent local option was carried out.

The Democratic Party. The Democratic Party, as known to American politics, was organized under the leadership of Andrew Jackson previous to the campaign of 1828. It had been in control of the government ten years previous to the territorial organization of Iowa. Party politics had assumed definite shape in the eastern counties of Iowa, when the region was yet a part of Wisconsin territory. With the organization of Iowa territory in 1838, President Van Buren appointed a full quota of Democratic officers to organize the new government. The Democrats continued to control the politics of the territorial legislature for several years, although they lost the appointive officers of the territory in 1841, with the advent of the Whig Party. The Democrats in the early days championed squatter sovereignty and the rights of the people. In 1842, they urged statehood, because they said that would give the state the right and privilege of selecting its own officers, who would then be directly responsible to the people. Previous to 1854, Iowa was Democratic, except that Whig officers were chosen by the president from 1841 to 1845. Since 1854, the Republican Party has been supreme, with the exceptions of two terms of Democratic administration under Governor Horace Boies, from 1890 to 1894.

The Whig Party. The Whig Party had its origin in the political consolidation of the National Republicans and the other anti-slave factions about the year 1834. The Whig Party in Iowa was organized at Bloomington in July, 1840. The territorial election that year resulted in the choice of fifteen Democrats and eleven Whigs to the house of representatives, and of seven Whigs and six Democrats to the council. The Whig Party never had a clear-cut statement of principles and was never thoroughly organized. Its history in Iowa as a local party was no exception to the history of the party in the nation. It advocated one term for the presidency; a sound national currency; just protection to American labor; distribution of public land proceeds among the states. In 1845, the state Constitution contained a provision which forbade the organization of banks for the issuance of paper money. The Whigs objected to this, but were unable to change it. The only Whig governor elected under the state organization was James W. Grimes.

The Republican Party. The Republican Party was the successor to the Whigs and the other political factions opposed to the further extension of slavery. It originated in meetings held in Wisconsin and Michigan during the year 1854. It became a state party in some of the north-west states during 1854 and made its first entrance into National politics in the campaign and election of 1856. In 1855, James W. Grimes, who had been elected governor on the Whig ticket of 1854, began a systematic campaign in Iowa to unite the factions of the anti-slave parties into a solid formation. This resulted in the following year in the Republican Party of Iowa, which had as its chief political principle "no interference with slavery where it exists, but no further extension of slave territory." Governor Grimes, the organizer of the party, came to be known as the "Father of Republicanism in Iowa." The Party platform in Iowa in 1856 declared in favor of the liberty of the people, the sovereignty of the states and the perpetuity of the Union. It declared that the agents of the Federal Government alone should construe the powers of the Constitution and the acts of Congress. It advocated Federal abolition of slavery within Federal jurisdiction, and asked the states to abolish slavery within their borders. The Republican Party has been in power in Iowa since 1860, except during four years from 1890-94.

Other Parties. Besides the Republican and Democratic Parties, which have controlled the government of Iowa since the beginning, the other present-day parties are: the Prohibition Party; the Socialist Party; the People's Party; and the Independence Party. Of these various parties the Prohibition Party has polled the largest vote in recent years. In the election of 1910, the Prohibition Party polled 10,120 votes for governor, while the Socialist Party followed next in order with 9681. In this same election the Republicans polled 205,653 votes for governor, and the Democrats 187,316.

Later Political Issues. Slavery was the chief issue from 1854 till the close of the Civil War. The Whigs were strongly opposed to the repeal of the Missouri Compromise as was done by the passage of the Kansas-Nebraska Bill. The new Republican Party strongly advocated non-extension of slavery. In 1855, a platform was adopted advocating the colonization of negroes as the best means of settling the slave question. This of course meant they should not have equal political rights with the whites.

The revision of the state Constitution in 1857 was made a political issue. The Republicans advocated greater freedom of election in naming state officers and wished to have supreme court judges elected by the people instead of chosen by the legislature. In 1858, the Democrats opposed the Republican provision in the Constitution providing for the education of both white and colored children. They thought negroes ought not to be admitted to the schools.

The tariff issue has continued to be the leading issue between the Democratic and the Republican Parties. In general, the Republicans have advocated a tariff for protection to home industries in addition to that of furnishing revenue. The Democrats have held that the government ought to have only such tariff as is necessary to pay the running expenses of the government. During the recent campaigns the two parties seem to have come much closer together on this great issue. Progressive Republicans advocate a reduction of tariff rates, while the Democrats approve of a low tariff.

The sentiment against intemperance gradually increased after the close of the Civil War. In the campaigns of 1867 and 1868 the contest was sharp between license and and prohibition. In 1867, the Democrats advocated a well-regulated license law, and this plank appeared in the Democratic platform for the next twenty years. The Republicans favored prohibition, but were not strong enough in their support of it to adopt it as an issue. In 1870, a local option law was enacted, but it was not satisfactory to either side, and in 1871 it was declared unconstitutional. By 1875 the dissatisfaction of the prohibition element in both parties became so strong as to cause the formation of a third party, since known in Iowa as the Prohibition Party. This party has continued to grow until it is now strong enough to force the Republicans and Democratic Parties to adopt its fundamental principles or meet defeat at the poles. In 1894, the Mulct Law was enacted, which amended the prohibitory law to the extent of permitting local option in towns and counties where the people so declare.

CHAPTER XXI.

POLITICAL PARTY MACHINERY

Committees. In National politics each political party places the interests of the party in the hands of a National committee consisting of one member from each state and territory. This committee determines the date for holding the National nominating convention, raises campaign funds, prints and distributes campaign literature, provides speakers, organizes political clubs, etc.

Each party in the state has a similar organization known as the state central committee. It consists of one member from each Congressional district. The state central committee works for the interests of the party in the state in about the same manner that the National committee works through the several states. The state committee tries to carry the state ticket for its party and to win the support of the state in the National election. The organization is generally carried still further and each county has a county committee composed of one member from each township. In some instances, the townships choose committees to take charge of party interests there. All these different committees have the same object in view — to carry their party to victory at the general election.

Methods of Choosing Candidates. Candidates may be named or selected by either of three methods — the caucus, the convention, or the primary election. A caucus is an assemblage of voters of a party for the purpose of naming candidates or for choosing delegates to a convention. A caucus is composed of all voters of a party who wish to attend, and is therefore purely democratic in character. The caucus is generally held in townships, towns, or cities. It is presided over by a chairman, and a secretary is selected to take the minutes. The convention is an assemblage of delegates who have been chosen to represent smaller political bodies, or units of government. It is representative in character and not purely democratic. The object of the convention is the same as that of the caucus — the naming of candidates for office or for choosing delegates to a higher convention. The convention generally calls a temporary chairman to the chair until a permanent chairman and a secretary are chosen. The primary election system of choosing candidates is where the party holds an election, at which time all members of the party may go and vote by ballot for the persons of their choice as candidates. The person or persons receiving the highest number of votes being the candidate of the party.

Machinery at Work. Five or six months preceding a general election, the chairman of the local committee, or a leading politician of the party, calls a township or city caucus. This is generally done through newspaper announcements giving the date and place of the meeting. In the townships such meetings are generally held in school-houses, while in towns the town halls are selected. All voters having voted for the party at the general election are recognized as qualified. The meeting is called to order and a presiding officer is chosen. The chairman then announces the local offices to be filled and the delegates to be chosen to the next higher convention. Candidates are then selected for the offices to be filled and are generally chosen by acclamation. Delegates are then named, and comprise as many as the township or town are entitled to according to the last general election. Resolutions are then presented commending past actions of the party and recommendations are made of what principles ought to be advocated by the party in the coming campaign. The caucus thus described is the only purely democratic party organization—the convention next above the caucus being representative in character.

The county convention meets some time after the town and township caucuses. The chairman of the county central committee determines the time of calling the convention. This convention formerly nominated the candidates for county offices, as well as elected delegates to the state convention, but since the enactment of the primary election law in 1907, candidates for township and county offices have been selected by the primary. Other conventions are held throughout the state, such as district conventions for selecting of candidates for district judges. The state convention consists of delegates chosen by the county conventions and is still used to nominate candidates for the office of judge of the supreme court, and to choose delegates from the state to the party National nominating convention.

The Primary Election. The legislature of 1907 enacted the Primary Election Law. It provides that “the candidates of political parties for all offices which under the law are filled by the direct vote of the voters of this state at the general election in November (except candidates for the office of judge of the supreme, district, and superior courts), for the office of Senator in the Congress of the United States, and for the office of elector of the President and the Vice-President of the United States, shall be nominated at a primary election, and delegates to the county conventions of said political parties or organizations, and party county committeemen shall be elected at said primary election.” The law also provides that the election shall be held at the usual voting places of the several precincts, on the first Monday in June, 1908, and biennially thereafter. The law defines a primary election as, "an election by the members of various political parties for the purpose of placing in nomination candidates for public office, for selecting delegates to conventions, and for the selection of party committeemen." A political party is defined as "a party, which at the last preceding general election, cast for its candidate for governor at least two percentum of the total vote cast at said election."

No candidate for an elective county office shall have his name printed upon the official primary ballot of his party unless at least thirty days prior to the day fixed for holding the primary election a nomination paper shall have been filed in his behalf in the office of the county auditor; and no candidate for nomination for an elective state office, or for representative in the Congress of the United States, or member of the general assembly, shall have his name printed upon the official primary ballot of his party, unless at least forty days prior to such primary election a nomination paper shall have been filed in his behalf in the office of the secretary of state; and no member of a political party desiring or intending to be a candidate for the office of Senator in the Congress of the United States, or a candidate for the office of elector of the President or the Vice-President of the United States, shall have his name printed upon the official primary ballot of his party in any election precinct unless at least forty days prior to such primary election a nomination paper shall have been filed in his behalf in the office of the secretary of state. A candidate for an office to be filled by the voters of a sub-division of a county shall not be required to file any nomination paper or papers.

A nomination paper for a state office, United States Senator, or elector at large, must be signed by at least one percentum of the voters of the party (as shown by the returns of the last general election) of such candidates, in each of at least ten counties of the state, and in the aggregate not less than one-half of one percentum of the total vote of his party in the state, as shown by the last general election; a nomination paper for a Representative in Congress, district elector, or senator in the general assembly in districts composed of more than one county, by at least two percentum of the voters of his party, as shown by the last general election, in at least one-half of the counties of the district, and in the aggregate not less than one percentum of the total vote of his party in such district, as shown by the last general election; a nomination paper for an office to be filled by the voters of a county, by at least two percentum of the party vote in the county, as shown by the last general election.

CHAPTER XXII.

SOCIAL AND ECONOMIC LEGISLATION

Iowa Land Grants. The early economic development of Iowa was greatly aided by land grants made by Congress to the railroad interests of the state. As early as 1846, Congress granted the alternate sections of land along the Des Moines River for a distance of six miles along either side for the improvement of the river as a channel of navigation. In 1856, Congressional land grants were made for the building of four railroads across the state. The total amount of land donated for the purpose of economic improvement was estimated at 4,394,400 acres. These grants of land were an important factor in the civil and social development of the state, and offer a partial explanation for the very rapid settlement of Iowa and for its early material prosperity. The lands thus granted were distributed among the different railroads as follows:

Burlington and Missouri River	292,806 acres
Mississippi and Missouri River	482,374 acres
Cedar Rapids and Missouri River.....	735,997 acres
Dubuque and Sioux City	1,232,359 acres
McGregor and Sioux City	137,572 acres
Des Moines Valley	1,105,381 acres
Sioux City and St. Paul	407,910 acres

Corporations in the State. Iowa has from the beginning maintained a liberal attitude towards corporations. Railroads, factories, banks, telegraphs, and express companies, telephones, and incorporated business firms are flourishing under Iowa law. The state has, however, maintained a considerable supervisory control over such business corporations as are most closely related to the people's interests. Insurance companies, loan and trust companies, building and loan associations must submit to state supervision by the auditor. Railroads, telegraphs, telephones and express companies must have their charters registered with the state and submit their franchises to taxation by the state. Certain kinds of health and accident associations are prohibited, while some kinds of corporations for pecuniary profit can only be created after the law creating them has been referred to and accepted by a vote of the people.

Labor Legislation. In recent years, the people of Iowa, have rapidly become a business and manufacturing people as well as an agricultural people. The working classes have come to demand special legislation protecting their interests and their welfare. The relations between capital and labor are becoming more urgent in demanding legislation defining the rights and privileges of each. The legislature has enacted laws determining the hours of labor and the age at which children may be employed. Laws also exist relative to the employment of women in factories, and relative to the securing of safe and sanitary conditions in factories. Factory operators may be held liable for accidents arising through negligence of the owner or through the use of unsafe machinery. Labor unions for the protection of the laborer's rights and privileges exist throughout the state. Laws exist for the suppression of riots, strikes, and lockouts, and when necessary the organized militia of the state may be called out to protect property and to assist the civil authority in maintaining order.

Organized Charity. During the year 1904, the different counties of Iowa spent $960,275 for poor relief, not including the soldier's relief fund, nor did it include the large sum expended that year by private individuals, lodges, churches and general charity organizations. About forty towns and cities in Iowa have organized charity associations under various names, while the King's Daughters, Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Woman's Relief Corps, Silent Ministry and other similar organizations do charity work in many places having regular organized charity. Such cities as Des Moines, Davenport, Burlington, Council Bluffs, Keokuk and others, have regular paid secretaries to take charge of charity work. In such cities the work is done on a systematic basis and great saving in the amount of money given has resulted, as well as a much better and wiser distribution to the deserving.

In addition to the above voluntary organizations, the state maintains hospitals for the insane and the feeble-minded, and for inebriates, schools for the deaf and the blind, homes for orphan children, county farms for the poor in each county, and through the county supervisors and the township trustees material assistance in the form of money and supplies is given to the poor.

Health Legislation. Modern governments consider it a duty of the state to protect the health of its citizens as well as to protect their liberties. The state law has provided a Board of health whose duty it is to inspect the water supply of cities, make rules concerning the quarantine of contagious diseases, compel vaccination to prevent the spread of disease, compel the observance of sanitary regulations, etc. Foods are now analyzed and inspected and labeled as to composition; drinking water may be sent to the state chemist for analysis; legislation is enacted concerning public drinking cups, construction of fire-escapes required; doors on public buildings must swing out, and various other regulations are provided to insure greater safety to the individual. The state no longer hesitates to compel the individual to abide by laws for the better health and sanitary regulations of the community.

Protection of Morals. It is difficult to legislate effectively on morals. The morals of a community will not rise higher than the public sentiment will support. Public sentiment depends almost entirely upon the character of the individuals living in the community. It is the aim of the state to legislate concerning such actions of the people as are injurious to the better life of the community, and to lay down rules and regulations for the control of such persons as do not of their own accord realize their personal responsibility to the community life.

Laws have been enacted preventing the carrying of fire-arms, the desecration of the Sabbath, the using of profane language in public places, and the exercise of such practices as tend to lower or destroy the good character of others. Sunday dancing, shooting, hunting, horse-racing, baseball playing and other similar amusements are forbidden by law. In 1907, the legislature passed an act prohibiting baseball games, horse racing, and other similar sports on Memorial Day before three o'clock in the afternoon. Prize fighting in Iowa is punishable by a fine of not less than $100 or more than $1000. The enforcement of all such laws as the above depends much upon the public sentiment of the community.

Natural Resources. The rapid depletion of our natural resources has caused the people of Iowa to enact legislation for the purpose of preserving what is left of forests, minerals, water power, wild game, etc. Arbor Day is now observed in practically all of the public schools, and the spirit of tree planting is rapidly spreading among the people of the state until many farmers are starting large groves on waste lands. Laws have been enacted preventing the taking of game fish from the streams of Iowa, except during the proper season. Quails, prairie chickens and other wild game, cannot be killed during the brooding season. Every year the Federal Government furnishes the state with millions of small fish with which to stock the streams, and the state maintains fish hatcheries for the raising and distributing of fish. English pheasants and Hungarian partridges have been brought to the state by the game warden and turned loose in various counties. Education in the grades and rural schools has done much to interest children in the song birds and birds of plumage, and is aiding much in the prevention of their wanton destruction.

2. What are the leading railroad lines across the state of Iowa to-day?

CHAPTER XXIII.

TAXATION

Necessity of Taxation. Government is for the protection of the privileges and rights of the people. Prosperity, happiness and contentment, can rule only where people feel secure in person, and know their personal rights and privileges are carefully guarded. In order that government may be effective in thus serving the people, a great amount of governmental machinery must be maintained. Executive officers by thousands are needed to administer the government. Legislators almost as numerous must make the laws. Judges in nation, state, district, county and municipality must interpret law and punish offenses. All of these officers must receive a just compensation. Salaries of officers in some states amount to millions of dollars each year. Public roads must be made and kept in repair, bridges built, streets paved, public buildings erected, charitable and penal institutions maintained, schools supported and the general moral and intellectual interests of the community provided for. All of this costs an enormous amount of money each year. People ought, in return for these privileges, pay the expenses of maintaining government. In order that each person may pay proportionately to the assistance he receives, some method must be used to make such apportionment. Taxation is the only means by which governments may exist. Furthermore, if taxes are justly imposed, they furnish the best means of apportioning the cost of government among the people.

Kinds of Taxes. Taxes are divided into two general classes — direct and indirect. A direct tax is a tax paid by the individual to the government directly. It may be either a sum of money or an amount of labor, rendered directly to the government. An indirect tax is a tax paid as a portion of the cost of the article. It is paid by the consumer, who pays the tax as a part of the cost price, and often without thinking, or even knowing, that he pays tax. Poll tax, land tax, and property tax are good examples of direct taxes. Duties, imposts, and excise taxes are examples of indirect taxes. At present, in the United States, direct taxes are levied by state and municipal authority. Congress has levied direct taxes on only five occasions in our history. The people of the states do not pay Federal taxes as we commonly consider the term tax. The expenses of the Federal Government are paid by duties, imposts and excises. It is only with direct taxes that we are dealing in this chapter.

The Process of Taxation. The first step in the process of taxation is making the tax levy. By making the tax levy we mean determining the amount to be raised, or the amount of tax necessary to pay the expenses of the state during a certain period. This is done in the following manner. The state legislature determines the amount to be raised for state purposes. This is based largely upon the required expenditure of the previous year. It is a very complex problem and must be carefully worked out by a committee chosen for that purpose. The local Board of supervisors of each county makes a careful estimate of the necessary expenses to run the county for the next year. This amount is also based largely upon the necessary expenses of the previous year. The township trustees in turn estimate the amount of money necessary to pay the running expenses of the township. The council in the city or town determines the amount to be raised for the support of the municipality. Each of these authorities determines the amount of revenue for that local unit and also determines the amount of taxable property, from the assessors' books, in that unit. These facts are submitted to the county auditor, who adds to the tax required for the expenses of each town, city, and township, the tax of the county and that of the state, and then determines the millage for each township and for each town and city.

The second step in the process of taxation is the assessment of property, which is done by the assessors in the towns and townships. The assessor must assess every person of age within his assessment district. Women who possess neither real estate nor personal property have no taxes. Every male citizen between the ages of twenty-one and forty-five years must pay poll tax in addition to real estate and personal property taxes unless exempt for cause. It is the duty of the assessor to find all taxable property in his district, and to estimate its cash value. In Iowa, property is listed at its cash value and is taxed for one-fourth that value.

The third step in taxation is the equalization of taxes. Each unit of government has a Board whose duty it is to hear complaints and to make proper adjustments known as equalization of taxes. In the township this Board is the Board of trustees; in the towns or cities, the council; in the county, the Board of supervisors; and for the state, the executive council. These Boards have the power of raising or lowering the assessments, with the right of the aggrieved parties to appeal to the courts.

The fourth step is the collection of taxes. The county treasurer is the collector of all taxes. The assessors report to the Boards of equalization, who in turn send the assessors' lists of all taxable property to the county auditor. The auditor prepares the tax list from the assessors' books

The tax list consists of the names of all persons in the county subject to taxes and the amount each must pay. The auditor then turns the tax list over to the county treasurer, who is the collector of all taxes. It is the duty of every person who has taxes to pay to call at the office of the county treasurer, or at the office of one of his deputies, and pay his taxes. Taxes may be paid in either one or two installments. They may be paid in full between the first Monday in January and the first day of March. They may be paid in two installments, one-half before the first day of March and the second half before the first day of September. The first half becomes delinquent on the first day of April, and the second the first day of October. If taxes are not paid before they become delinquent, they draw interest at the rate of one per cent per month until paid. On the first Monday in December, the county treasurer offers for sale all real estate upon which delinquent taxes remain unpaid.

Difficulties of Taxation. The present system of taxation is not altogether satisfactory. One difficulty is in the work of the assessor. If he is not well experienced and quite rigid in his investigations, the tax-payer may take advantage of him and give in a valuation lower than what is correct. Secondly, it is difficult to know whether the taxpayer's own estimate is correct, however conscientious he may be. Thirdly, a very large amount of property is held in stocks, bonds, mortgages, and other similar securities, which are difficult to find if the owner omits them or refuses to list them. Furthermore, such property as is purchased after the first of January is not taxable to the person holding it if disposed of before the first day of the next January. In 1911, the legislature provided for a tax commission, to be appointed by the governor, to investigate the subject of taxation in Iowa and to recommend to the state a more equitable method of taxation.

Exemption from Taxation. Federal property located in the states, such as post-office buildings, forts, arsenals, etc., cannot be taxed by the states. Neither do states tax their own state property, such as capital buildings, court houses, public buildings of the county, etc. The property of religious, benevolent, scientific and literary institutions is generally exempt. Such property includes churches, asylums, public sanitariums and hospitals, schools, libraries, etc. The state may, however, tax these institutions, and it sometimes happens that local authorities do tax them. A mechanic's tools, a teamster's team and wagon, a workman's material equipment whereby he earns his living, and a professional man's working library are not subject to taxation. Young livestock under a certain age is exempt. Honorably discharged soldiers and sailors are allowed an exemption of personal property to the extent of $1200.
